I will mail to any person a recipe, which, if properly acted upon, will save considerable material and labor in shading greenhouse glass. NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

ONE of the most useful of the low-growing shrubs is Weigela rosea nana variegata.

Of all the golden evergreens Retinospora plumosa aurea is the most popular and generally useful.

THE catalpa gives good satisfaction for a time; then the planter wishes he had chosen a maple, an elm or an oak.

O. C. SIMONDS, Chicago, has been at Quincy, Ill., to suggest a treatment for an addition of eighteen acres to South park.

THE Miller Nursery Co., Rochester, N. Y., has been incorporated with $30,000 capital. The directors are F. A. Miller and Ada M. Miller, of Rochester, and G. M. Kellogg, of Hornellsville.

THE Jonesboro Nursery and Plantation Co., Jonesboro, Ark., has amended its articles of incorporation, changing its name to the American Nurseries Co. and increasing its capital stock to $10,000.

THE liriodendron is a splendid tree of quick growth. One merit is its smooth bark. Transplanting is best done in spring, just as growth commences. It is classed as reliably hardy, but some fine trees succumbed in the vicinity of Chicago when we had a winter with little snow and alternate thaws and severe cold.

It is beginning to be understood that the oak is not the difficult subject, of slow growth, it has been considered. When frequently moved in the nursery row they form fibrous roots and are not hard to establish in their permanent location. The pin oak, Quercus palustris, is of fairly rapid growth and will stand many unfavorable conditions. It should have room for development.

RHODODENDRONS do well in most soils that are free from limestone, but they respond to liberal treatment. The native species are hardy as far north as New England. A shelter belt is effective where the position would otherwise be unduly exposed. A mulch of lawn clippings conserves moisture in summer and a heavier mulch of manure in winter protects the roots. Seeding should be prevented. The plants are easily moved in spring or fall and ship successfully if dug with good balls of earth.

A BELGIAN nursery grows immense quantities of cacti from seed. Most of the seed is gathered from old plants in the nursery, but a considerable quantity is imported from America, and it is a curious fact that the nursery afterward finds a good sale for the young plants in the same country. The seed of the mamillarias germinate in three to five days; cereus, seven days; echinopsis, eight days; echinocactus, ten or twelve days; opuntias, three to four weeks, often longer. Interesting new forms are secured by cross-fertilization.

DENVER, COLO.

With the approach of Easter everything in the floral line seems to be putting on its best garb; from the hardy lilac all the way down to the miniature primula all seem to be in the greatest profusion of bloom. Weather conditions enable the florists out here to bring in flowering stock with ease. Deciduous shrubs are ready to pop open under a few days' treatment of moist atmosphere, and a week's notice to the florist enables him to give his patrons a spring decoration of apple, plum and cherry blossoms. Considering the beauty and adaptability of this kind of stock and its profusion throughout the country, it is astonishing how little of it is used in floral arrangements. I noticed quite recently in the windows of the Scott Floral Co. an attractive decoration of apricot branches combined with light azaleas and delicate pink ribbon, deftly arranged. The apricot in question is the Russian variety, which frequently flowers but seldom sets fruit out here. It develops into flower in cold water in a few days and possesses the good qualities of keeping and having a delicious fragrance.

Prospects for the Easter trade are very encouraging, especially from the standpoint of supply, which will be abundant in everything but American Beauties, which have been very scarce since Christmas. Bulbous stuff will be plentiful and of good quality. Lilies, while better than they have been for several years, are not up to the old-time standard. Hydrangeas, deutzias, lilacs and other shrubs are showing up well and will be quite a factor in Easter trade.

A new aspirant for recognition out here this spring is the imported wistaria, which at this date promises to be quite attractive. It is grown in 6-inch pots and not over eighteen inches high, carrying from six to twelve flowers. The Park Floral Co. is handling this stock and think highly of it.

GEORGE REINBERG, 51 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

genistas, but their usefulness out here at Easter is questionable, as heretofore they have proven poor sellers.

The State Association of Florists, which was organized last year, held its annual meeting recently at the offices of the Park Floral Co. Its officers are: President, John Satterthwait, Denver; first vice-president, Frank Crump, Colorado Springs; second vice-president, George Fleischer, Pueblo; secretary, J. A. Valentine, Denver; treasurer, Mrs. Johnson, Boulder. Its membership is made up chiefly from the business establishments throughout the state. Its object is to advance the various interests of the business, foster a social feeling and create an incentive to grow superior stock and exhibit same in friendly competition at the annual State Fair and other exhibitions. Several good papers were read at the last meeting. Prominent among them was one on carnation culture by N. A. Benson, one on the trials of a commission man by L. C. Waterbury, and a few terse remarks by Mrs. Johnson on the first year's experience of a florist in the business, in which she showed the disastrous as well as the humorous features of the business from the standpoint of a beginner.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Business last week proved to be quite active and the apparent upward movement from now to Easter will no doubt be very gratifying to all. Last week the demand was active enough to avoid heavy accumulations of stock. All kinds of flowers are arriving in fine condition and a good share of sunshine will bring good crops in for Easter. All local growers report stock in the best condition, especially roses, lilies, carnations and all bulbous stock.

Notes.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Club a fine exhibition of carnations was made and our local growers who exhibited can feel proud of the showing they made.

The exhibit of miscellaneous flowers made by the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. at this meeting was certainly a credit to that concern. Fifteen new names were proposed at this meeting. "Easter Flowers" will be the topic for the next meeting, April 5. Hoo-Hoo.

A BUSY PLANTSMAN.

Godfrey Aschmann turns out surprising quantities of stock at his place on Ontario street, Philadelphia. He gets as many crops out of his houses as any grower in the business. The place is always full, something always at hand to take the place of the outgoing, finished plants. The araucaria is one of his all-the-year-around specialties, but just now the azalea is to the fore. Mr. Aschmann makes an annual trip to Belgium and his stock shows the result this season in the large proportion of Mme. Van der Cruyssen. This most popular of all azaleas has been scarce for the last couple of years, but Mr. Aschmann was able to secure several thousands. Many he sold on arrival, but upwards of 2,000 are in fine flower for Easter. He also has all the standard varieties in quantity. He also has a whole house of cinerarias, 1,800 plants, which make a fine display. No stock of Easter plants would be complete without lilies, and his will nearly all be ready in time. Spiræas are another item. Mr. Aschmann is always glad to see visitors.

A GOOD OPENING.

No doubt many of your subscribers would be glad to learn of a good opening for a progressive young man to engage in the florist's business in a prosperous town of over 20,000 inhabitants, where there is no regular florist. Our twin city of Winston-Salem, North Carolina, is just such a place. We have no regular florist. We have to send away for our flowers. I have a small private greenhouse for my own use and am so often applied to for flowers that I thought I would write to your journal and see if you could not interest some good young florist, with some money to start with. I would be willing to aid such a florist if the right kind of a man, to start in the florist's business here. I would be pleased to correspond with some young man who thoroughly understands the florist's business desiring such an opportunity as is here offered.

C. A. HEGE.

A WISCONSIN BOILER.

Some of the florists, as well as many other people up in Wisconsin, are using a boiler which has gained a reputation outside that state as a great fuel saver. It is made by the Burns Boiler & Manufacturing Company, of West De Pere, Wis., who show many letters which state that when old boilers were replaced by theirs a saving of 50 per cent in fuel was effected. The boilers are made of flange steel and are internally fired, requiring no brick work.

NEWTON, KAN.—C. L. Shank is making quite an addition to his up-to-date range of glass, the new houses to be used this spring to accommodate a fine lot of bedding plants. Everything about his place is neat and clean and speaks of prosperity.

This is Mr. Reinberg's 1903 addition: Nine houses $27\frac{1}{2} \times 304$, $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet to the Garland Iron Gutter.

Mr. Peter Reinberg says: —

"When a man has once tried iron gutters it spoils him for anything else. I am rebuilding a range of houses 27×265 feet and although the wooden gutters were in fair shape, I am replacing them with Garland's Iron Gutters because I can

Save 32 ft. of bench space, 265 ft. long and Build the range with $\frac{1}{3}$ less posts.

I can also have less shade, more head room and gain in other ways.

I expect the 8,480 square ft. of extra bench room gained to almost repay the cost of rebuilding in one season."

ST. PAUL.

The weather has at last turned warm and pleasant and trade has revived. Flowers have improved in quality and the supply is about equal to the demand. Beauties are still short, but are improving daily, both in quality and quantity. Violets are now quite plentiful and have dropped to $5 and $7.50 per 1,000. Bulbous stock has been very plentiful of late and has not sold quite as well as a year ago. Lilies are not very plentiful. In fact, there will not be a very large supply for Easter. Blooming plants are quite common. Most of the stores have a spring-like appearance in their window displays.

Gust Colberg, of the Swanson Floral Co., lost nearly all of his household goods by a fire, which destroyed his home the afternoon of March 5.

Wm. Speth has taken charge of L. L. May & Co.'s retail store. Their greenhouses are looking very fine this winter. A year ago they erected seven houses on the short-roof pattern. These houses are planted to roses this season, the stock showing up in fine shape. Roses are all grafted and grown two years. Liberty is the most profitable sort grown here this season. Beauties have done fairly well. In carnations, Enchantress is easily the leader. Violets have never done well here, the last planting developing club root very rapidly. On Easter lilies here, as elsewhere, disease has made its inroads, and some of the best bulbs only produced one or two blossoms. The bulbs are also badly mixed, there being eight or ten varieties in one batch. The Japanese giganteum, red stemmed, seems to be by far the best sort. An immense stock of Easter blooming plants is being grown. As this firm does an extensive catalogue business, large numbers of mailing plants are propagated. Frank Gustafson is the superintendent.

At Holm & Olson's I found the foreman, Ludwig Anderson, busy as ever. Roses and carnations are not grown here, the range being built for palms, ferns, mums, bulbous stock and bedding plants. One lot of 1,000 longiflorum, cold storage bulbs, were particularly fine. The longiflorum giganteum were also fine, but will have to be hustled to get into bloom for Easter. The other stock is all in good shape and a sure trade winner. The growing facilities here are supplemented by numerous hotbeds, which are rendered necessary by their large trade in spring bedding plants.

NEW ROSES

Cardinal and Enchantress

Read testimonials from two of the largest growers in Washington who have bought a large number of plants after seeing them growing at my place.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1904.

Your new rose Cardinal came duly to hand and we firmly believe it will have a great future, and will certainly be a money maker as it is in a class all to itself, being superior in form and habit to anything that we have as yet seen. Your new rose Enchantress we also think will be a great money maker, judging from its profuse blooming quality, as we have seen it several times in mid-winter. It cannot help being a winner. Wishing you ever success, we remain,

Yours truly, A. GUDE & BRO.

American Rose Co., 909 F St., N. W., WASHINGTON, March 17, 1904.

DEAR SIR: We gave all the show possible to Enchantress and Cardinal, placing them in our window with placards telling what they were. They kept a week, retaining their brilliant color to the last. Cardinal was as full of perfume the day its petals dropped as when it was first cut. The roses are both matchless, and we believe destined to outclass all roses of their color for forcing under glass.

Very sincerely yours, AMERICAN ROSE CO., per B. D.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The H. Harrington Co., of Vashon, is breaking ground for two more houses, 20x150 feet, for carnations. They built three houses last year, besides rebuilding two small houses. Their carnations are in good shape and have been producing steadily since September. Enchantress, Adonis and Harlowarden are winners among the new ones this year with them. Their lilies are in fine condition and will no doubt be in time. Their bulbs produced about eighty per cent good plants.

The Woodland Park Floral Co. has the finest lot of roses to be seen in the state. They have just finished rebuilding five houses 12x150 feet which they have planted to vegetables for the spring and summer trade, after which they will be used for mums, etc. Mr. Hoffmeister, proprietor of the Washington Floral Co., is recovering from his attack of rheumatism.

The demand for first-class carnations has been good this year. There was a scare of a big surplus after the holidays, caused by heavy shipments sent down from Victoria, but now we hear that a great many of their plants have gone bad.

This has been a very bad winter, an unusual amount of dark weather, but not much frost. February broke the record for rainfall, about eight inches. Sweet peas, snapdragons and verbenas have wintered over; rose bushes have not lost their foliage, and have made some growth during the winter.

E. A. Perry, of Vashon, is building three houses for vegetables. This is Mr. Perry's first attempt at the business.

AN EARLY AZALEA.

We have now to do with a rich rose-colored azalea, which, judging from the plate in the Revue de l'Horticulture Belge for February, has flowers of a good shape, fine color, and an early-blooming tendency. It is Azalea indica Rose de Noel and was raised by M. De Smet-Duvivier as a sport, and flowers in December.

NEW ORLEANS.

Spring in the South.

As by a charm dame nature has awakened from her short slumber. The mocking bird has called her with his melancholy notes and she has donned her gala dress. Orange blossoms adorn her virgin head and roses her bridal gown. The bridal wreath awaited her in gorgeous bloom and peach and pear sent their beautiful blossoms to complete the decoration, while the warm sun brightened the day for her welcome.

The purple wistaria, with its wealth of graceful sprays, hugs the stately magnolia and sends down a shower of fading flowers, while pretty girls in light summer attire peep from behind the latticed galleries hidden under a wealth of scarlet and gold, our favorite climbing roses Reine Marie Henrietta and Marechal Niel. Old Mercury has been up in the seventies, making it rather uncomfortable for palms and ferns in the houses, and in a short time they will be out under slatted sheds. The pansy beds have been in their glory for some time. Violets have gone to rest for another year, while geraniums, heliotropes, salvias, begonias, etc., are taking the place of the earlier annuals. The lawns are awaiting their first clipping. Everybody is hustling to get the beds in shape for Easter. Greenhouse work is crowding and good help is at a premium. It is too late to plant trees and shrubbery; everything is green and blooming. The mespilus is ripening its golden fruit, camellias are passing away and the fragrant Magnolia fuscata fills the balmy night with its rich perfume, following the precocious Olea fragrans or sweet olive, which has just shed its last flowers. Easter lilies are stretching their necks trying to be on time and the scarlet Amaryllis Johnsoni is in bud. The first sweet peas in private gardens have made their appearance, a true sign that spring is here for good. We have reasons to thank the Lord for a good many things, and especially for the small coal bill, which, however, never assumes proportions like those of our northern friends.

NEW PINK CHRYSANTHEMUM

DR. ENGUEHARD,

The Finest Commercial Pink Chrysanthemum Ever Introduced.

WE WERE AWARDED FOR THIS FIRST PRIZE FOR THE BEST SIX BLOOMS ANY NEW PINK VARIETY, at the Chrysanthemum Show in New York. This is going to be in Pink Chrysanthemums what Col. D. Appleton has been in yellow and Timothy Eaton in white. It is a fine commercial flower of the largest size and an ideal color; fine, large, compact blooms of great substance; a fine shipper; something that has long been wanted in Pink Chrysanthemums. It has grand foliage, is an easy "doer," and is a phenomenal variety in every respect. Certificated by the C. S. A., having scored as high as 95 points. Fine, strong plants, ready for immediate delivery.

50 cents each, $5.00 per dozen, $30.00 per hundred.

ENGUEHARD

THE WHITE LAWSON,

THE MOST VALUABLE WHITE CARNATION

WHEN ONE CONSIDERS that about a third of all the carnations grown to-day are Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson, the value of a White Lawson will be at once apparent, and it will undoubtedly stand as far ahead of all white carnations as Mrs. Thos. W. Lawson stands ahead of all pink carnations for commercial or private use. Nothing need be said in praise of White Lawson except to state that it is a sport of Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson, and as good as that variety in every respect, with all of its remarkable free-blooming qualities, but is pure white. No extended description is necessary; its value will appeal at once to every carnation grower. This variety originated with Mr. Charles H. Allen, Floral Park, New York, and recognizing at once its great value to the trade, we purchased his entire stock. As there are other stocks of White Lawson offered, in order to secure this superior stock, the value of which has been well established, ORDER FROM US, as WE CONTROL THIS ENTIRE STOCK.

GENERAL MacARTHUR.

Heller Bros., of New Castle, Ind., are growing 600 plants of Storrs & Harrison's new rose, to be disseminated next month. This is General MacArthur, of which F. J. Ammann said in a talk to the St. Louis Florists' Club: "I tell you, the General is a dandy, dressed out in true military style. Why, it is worth the price of the rose just to see that magnificent foliage. The flower is fully as good as Liberty and it seems to be a grower, not a restorer."

General MacArthur originated with E. G. Hill, at Richmond, and Heller Bros. have watched it for three years. They do not think it quite so good a flower as Liberty but find it so healthy and free blooming that they prefer it. They say that they think it will prove to be better than any red rose now on the market from the fact that anybody can do it well and cheaply in a house with Bride or Maid.

ANOTHER RED ROSE.

A European novelty which will be tried by many American rose growers next season is Etoile de France, which originated with J. Pernet-Ducher, the disseminator of Carnot, Testout, Chate-nay and many other good sorts. The new candidate is a seedling which is described as having "inherited from the seed-bearer variety, Mme. Abel Chate-nay, the wonderful habit of growth and free blooming qualities; from the fertilizer variety, Fisher Holmes, it has only kept the brilliant color."

BELLEFONTAINE, O.—Poole & Purllant have some seedling geraniums of which they think highly. The seed bearing parent was a white and one of the best of the seedlings is a robust white, another a fine light pink. The latter makes a fine pot plant as it carries its trusses well above the foliage.

HOT WATER VS. STEAM.

I should be glad of some advice on heating my greenhouses, three in number, each 19x56, three-quarter span. There is glass in the east end and there are 12-inch side lights. We are heating with a twelve horse-power steam boiler and it costs me $12 to $15 per week with coal at $7.50 per ton. I want to know if it would be cheaper to heat my small place with hot water instead of steam? I have two 2-inch mains on each side of the houses, on the posts overhead, running to the east end and returning on the south side in a coil of three 1 1/4-inch pipes and on the north side in a coil of four 1 1/4-inch pipes. The house nearest the boiler is warm enough with one 2-inch main and the north coil. The temperature required is 50 to 55 degrees at night when it is 5 degrees above zero outdoors. How many 1 1/4-inch pipes will be required for hot water? Would hot water be more economical? E. G.

By increasing the number of 1 1/4-inch pipes to thirteen in each house, placing an expansion tank on the return pipe close to the boiler, with the tank at least ten feet above the highest point in the system, making the tank of at least fifty gallons capacity, the houses can be heated with hot water. This will require much less attention than the steam and may prove somewhat less expensive in fuel. If during cold spells the hot water should prove inadequate it is a simple matter to have valves so arranged that the expansion tank can be cut off, the water drained to the proper level and the plant run as a steam plant. When milder weather returns the hot water plant can again be put in operation. This is one of the great advantages which the modern hot water system possesses over the old, open cast iron pipe system. L. C. C.

FITZGERALD, GA.—Joel Thomas will enlarge his greenhouses this season.

ARGENTINE, KAN.—Cyrus Earnst says trade is very good and he is looking for a big spring season.

NEW ROSE

GENERAL MACARTHUR

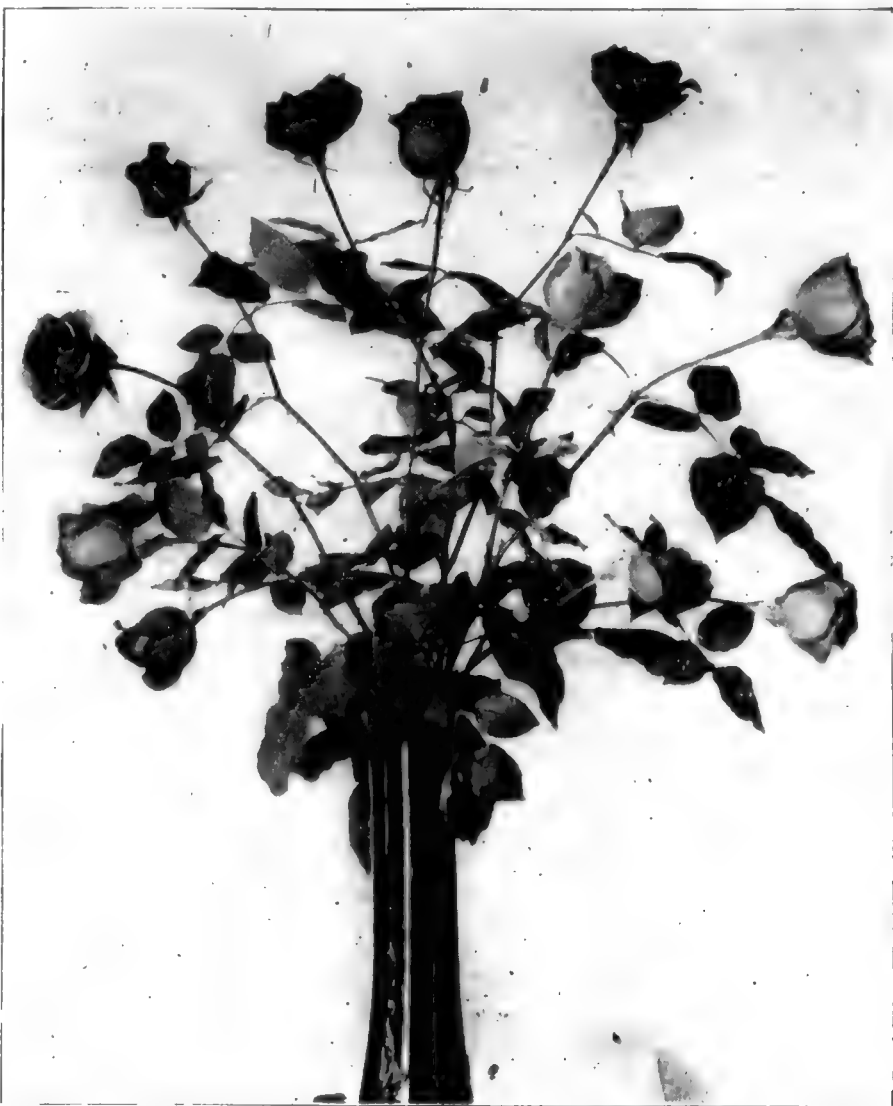

HYBRID TEA

COLOR BY FAR THE MOST BRILLIANT of any shade of crimson forcing rose ever offered, retaining its brilliancy when fully expanded. It is also one of the very sweetest varieties ever offered, of very easy culture, as it can be grown in the same temperature as an ordinary Tea variety such as Bride. It is a good, strong, vigorous grower, producing stems 24 to 30 inches long, a free and continuous producer. It can be grown at much less cost than Meteor or Liberty, and is a much brighter color than either; also larger when fully expanded. We predict that this will be the red rose for the multitude. Ready for distribution April 1, 1904.

NEW CASTLE, IND., February 26, 1904.

Our attention was called to the Rose, General MacArthur, three years ago, by the originator, who then had only the one plant. We liked its looks very much, and last year secured 25 plants from the Storrs & Harrison Co. for trial. We cut fine flowers from them all winter and made 600 cuttings which we are growing this winter. We commenced cutting good flowers from them in November, and have done so continuously ever since, it being distinctly a winter Rose. At this date the bench is a fine sight. The plants are from two to three feet high, and are sending out flowering shoots which are most all one to two feet in length, although quite a number are three feet or more. It has the most beautiful large, lustrous foliage, and most abundant of any rose we have ever seen. The flower is a brilliant red, and has a very fine odor. We find it the best Red Rose we have ever grown. While not as fine a flower as Liberty, with us it is much healthier and so much freer flowering that we prefer it. We have it growing in the same house as Bridesmaid.

Yours truly,
HELLER BROS.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

A white double flowered stock shown before the Floral Committee of the Royal Horticultural Society in May by Wm. Bull & Sons was pronounced quite remarkable by the committee. The flower-spikes were nearly two feet long, and the individual flowers nearly as large as those of a hollyhock (2 inches across); some of them showed signs of proliferation. There were thirteen fully expanded flowers upon a spike, and thirty to open. The leaves were unusually large.

SOIL that has been firmly compressed after having first been well pulverized seems to produce the best results in nearly all cases. For the majority of plants it is best to tread with the foot the beds and border previous to planting. The result is a generally more healthy growth, a more floriferous habit, and improved color in leafage and flower. Firm soil retains moisture much longer than loose ground and its fertility is not so rapidly exhausted. And weeds spring up much less frequently in soil that has been well firmed.

THE new bedding lobelia, Mrs. Clibran, is a very good variety. It has a compact habit, and indigo-blue flowers with white center.

YORK, NEB.—H. S. Harrison has been elected vice-president of the Nebraska State Horticultural Society, succeeding W. J. Hesser, of Plattsmouth.

Nephrolepis Scottii

THIS SPLENDID NEW FERN
Has received the Highest Award from the New York
Florists' Club and the American Institute, New York.

Its natural, compact habit admits of its being grown in one-half the space required to grow N. Bostoniensis. Its rapidity of increase is well proven by the fact that in October, 1900, I had but one plant with 4 fronds and at the present time I have three 152 feet houses full.

The illustration shows a plant each of N. Scottii and N. Bostoniensis; both were grown in five-inch pots, and it is easily seen how much more decorative N. Scottii is over the old Boston fern.

Strong rooted runners, with 3 to 4 fronds, cut from the bench, delivery commencing early in May
 All orders filled in rotation at the following prices: $4 per doz.; $25 per 100; $200 per 1000
 Strong 6-in. pot plants, ready May 1, $2 each; 8-in. pans, $3.50 each; 10-in. pans, $5 each.

I also offer for immediate delivery, fine heavy plants of NEPHROLEPIS PIERSONI in 8-in. pots, at $75 per 100.

ETNA, THE RED ROSE.

There was a little christening down at Richmond the other day when E. G. Hill returned from his recent trip among the growers, and the new red rose which is hoped will prove to be the forcing rose of the future is no longer nameless. They call it Etna. Etna is the tallest volcano in Europe and its red fires illumine the pages of history away back into the legends of Greek mythology. It is not vouchsafed who is responsible for the choice of the cognomenal appellation but it is pointed out that the rose is the hue of the conflagration, that commercially it is expected to tower above Meteor, Liberty and all other competitors in its class and maintain its exalted position until the present day shall be in the far horizon of floricultural retrospect. It is planned to distribute it next year.

VENTILATION FOR ORCHIDS.

Whenever the outside conditions are favorable, no opportunity should be lost for giving ample ventilation. In years past I have been an advocate of the free use of the roof ventilators, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, but experience has taught me that the conditions suitable for successful cultivation of orchids can be maintained without their use, even in the hottest days of summer. The use of the roof ventilators permits the humid atmosphere to escape, and yet this is the life of the plants. In winter especially, in exposed positions like our own, the use of roof ventilators would be little short of the wilful destruction of our plants. Designers of horticultural buildings have paid far too much attention to roof ventilation in the past, and even now we often see comparatively new erections without ventilators in the vicinity of the hot-water pipes. I hope to see in the near future even the side lights dispensed with, and a substantial brick wall taking their place. The saving in fire heat alone, apart from the possible fluctuations of temperature, is sufficient recommendation in itself to establish the advantages obtained from the more substantial buildings.

MOREHEAD STEAM TRAP

IT GIVES A PERFECT CIRCULATION.

Mt. Clemens, Mich.

We are grateful to the inventor, Mr. John Morehead, for so perfect an article as the Morehead Automatic Steam Trap for returning the condensation direct back to boiler. We have eight now in use—four of which were in use for five years, and the last four, which are an improvement on the first, are highly commendable for any person in need of traps; we certainly recommend them for doing the work satisfactorily.

JOHN BREITMEYER'S SONS.

London, Ont.

It affords us much pleasure to bear testimony to the efficient qualities of the Morehead Steam Trap; it has now been in use five years, during which time it has not cost one cent or has it been out of repair. It is easily installed, does all the work and keeps the pipes well drained from two forty horse-power boilers, heating over twenty-five thousand feet of glass, and returns all condensation direct to boiler.

J. GAMMAGE & SONS.

It makes no difference whether the boiler is below or above the heating coils.

CHICKEN MANURE.

Will you kindly tell us how we can use chicken manure to best advantage in the greenhouse? J. A. S.

Chicken manure is so much stronger than ordinary farm yard manure that it must be used with caution and particularly so when applied to greenhouse crops. To obtain good results from its use, it should be composted with at least twelve times its bulk of good, fresh loam and allowed to lie until decomposition is well advanced, when it should be turned over a few times at intervals of ten days. This makes an excellent top dressing for either roses or carnations, but it must not be used as a mulch. Containing strong caustic properties, it is very unsafe to use in potting or planting soil, even when thus diluted. When used for this purpose half this strength would be safer. RIBES.

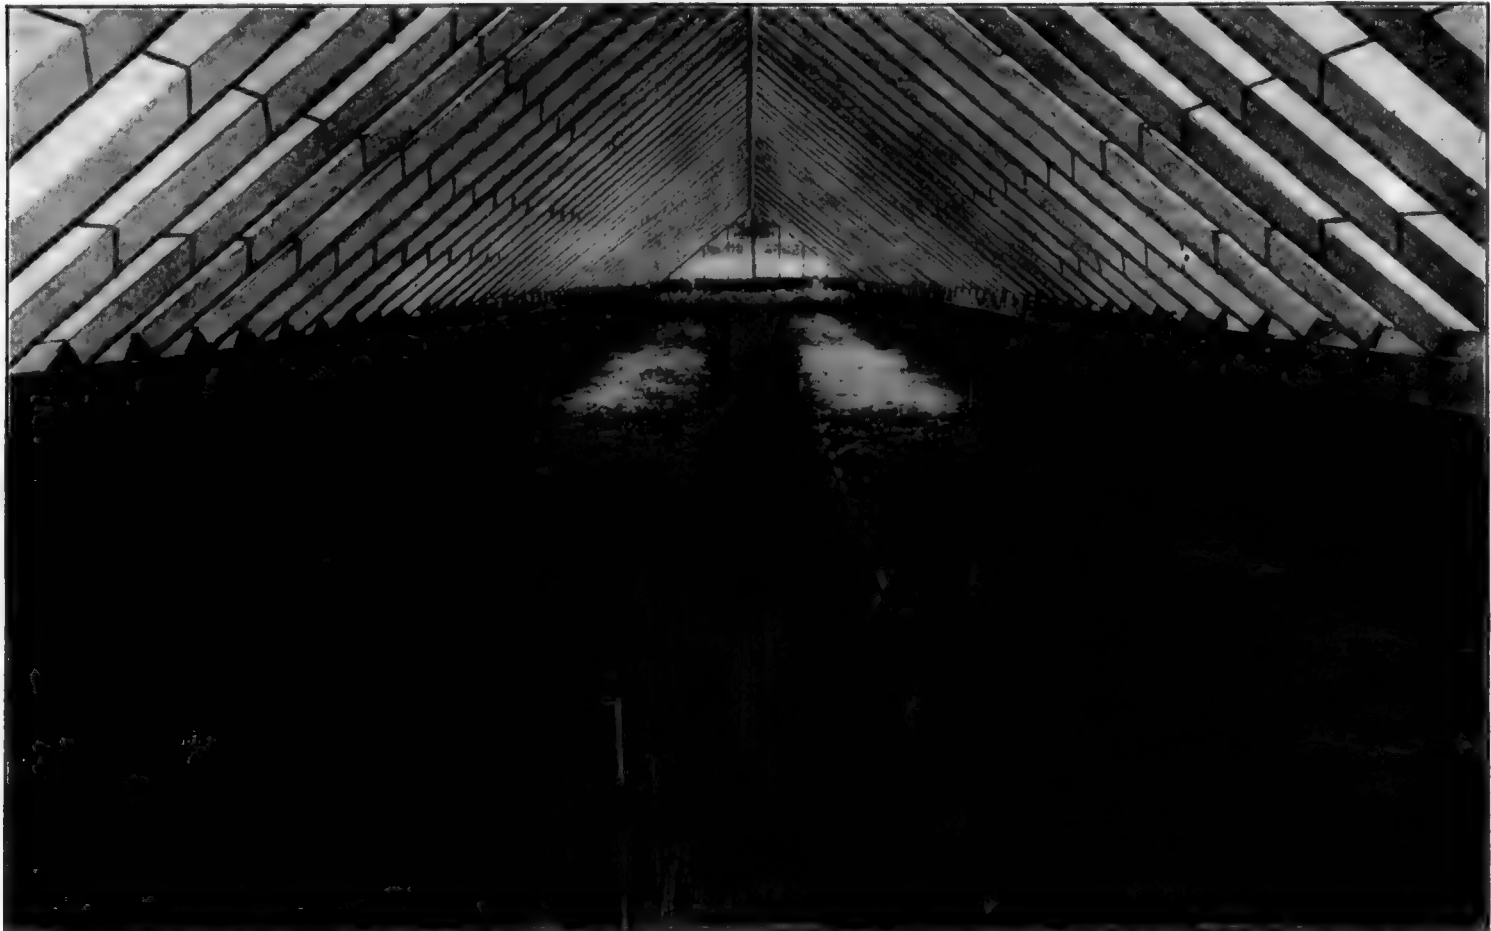

EUPHARIS GRANDIFLORA.

A correspondent of the Gardener's Chronicle sends a photograph showing a group of fine plants of Eucharis grandiflora and writes as follows: "The plants are never allowed to dry off, as is the practice with some cultivators. They always stand over a hot-water tank, so that they have abundance of atmospheric moisture, to which I believe our success is in a great measure due. We are never for long periods without eucharis flowers. One of the plants in the photograph had twenty-two flower-spikes, and some of the leaves are about two feet six inches long and eight inches across."

ASPECT.

As it is necessary for us to rebuild two of our greenhouses this spring, we want to move them to a more favorable location. We have a piece of land with a southern exposure along which the road runs northeast to southwest. Would it be best to build with this road, facing southeast, or at an angle and facing a little east of south? The value of land is no consideration. F. T. W.

Houses facing a few points east of south get more of the morning sun than if facing directly south, and this counts for a good deal during the short days. Our last block, which is devoted to carnations, is so placed and has given entire satisfaction. RIBES.

BOILER BUILDING.

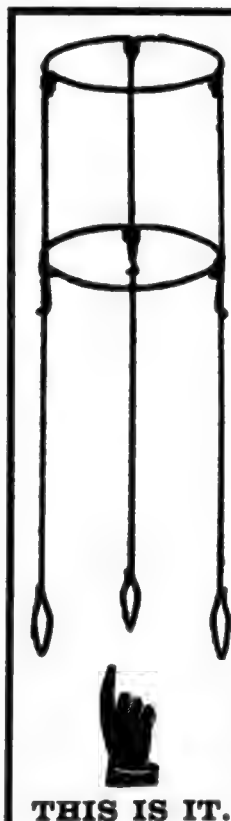

A boiler shop is a very prosaic as well as noisy place but often much of interest is to be found in unfrequented surroundings. Many a florist comes to Chicago to see the stock produced in the great ranges of glass and often visitors make a critical inspection of the boilers in use, but when ready for a heater a mail order will do; they seldom think of visiting the place where the boiler is made, although there are many things worth seeing there.

The works of the Kroeschell Bros. Co. occupy a half a block in Chicago, the floor space in the shop being 100x336 feet. They make high power steam boilers as well as greenhouse boilers, but the extent of their business in the latter department is well shown by the fact that there are now lined up on the floor more than forty greenhouse boilers, completed and ready for shipment when the men who have ordered them say the word. This practice of booking orders early in the year, building the boiler at once and holding it until wanted has been followed for several years, as deliveries are practically all wanted at once and it is impossible to manufacture a whole season's output in a few weeks.

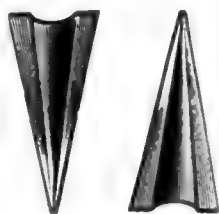

As to acceptances of boilers ordered long in advance, Mr. Wm. Kroeschell says that in their long experience they have had but two cases where a florist did not carry out his promise. He thinks the florist's promise is as good as his bond. Mr. Kroeschell attends the S. A. F. and Carnation Society conventions and is heartily in sympathy with their work and proud of his membership. He may be expected to give some substantial evidence of his sincerity when the Carnation Society meets in Chicago next year.

FITZGERALD, GA.—Joel Thomas reports the season's business as fairly good, although trade on cut flowers has been a little slow. Fruit trees were in heavy bloom early in March.

BRISTOL, VT.—L. M. Gage says that the prospect for a good spring business is very encouraging.

Various Notes.

C. Curtis, one of our great vegetable growers, reports splendid success with his carnations. He planted one house this season for trial and did much better than expected. He said his carnation house has paid more dollars than any house on the place and he is going to plant all the stock he can raise this season. He also has the material for another house 20 x 200.

E. Latz reports trade encouraging. He built one house last fall for carnations, but could not secure plants enough to fill it. He says that if he had had it full he would have come out in good shape. He has made up his mind to have things a little different next season.

Mr. Winchel, another new grower, reports business good and expects to be in full crop for Easter.

F. Pursell, Salter's foreman, purchased E. Callister's place and will erect a rose house 30x150 as soon as the weather will permit.

As to varieties I find Enchantress to be the most satisfactory among our growers and will be mostly planted, as it is much ahead of any other. I have not seen a bench of Morning Glory that was in a satisfactory condition. Those that are growing Enchantress, report that it can be raised cheaper than any other. I can speak for the 600 plants which I have myself; we picked heavy for Christmas and New Year's and will be there for Easter, picking 300 or over a week at the present time, which no other carnation on the market will do. I consider it ahead of any. In white they all speak well of Peru and I think it has come to stay, as it seems to be doing better this year than ever. In dark pink it will be pretty hard for anyone to beat Lawson. Our growers are just commencing to grow this variety and begin to realize what they missed. Dark red is not much wanted here. In bright red a good many are raising the old Red Jacket but Crane is the favorite. Growers are purchasing new carnations less this season than ever. I think it would be a profitable advertisement for a grower of any new carnation to distribute it among the leading growers for trial, so as the growers could see for themselves the behavior of such a variety. Kroeschell Bros.' Boiler

READ WHAT MR. ZWEIFEL HAS TO SAY ABOUT IT.

KROESCHELL BROS. CO., 51 Erie Street, Chicago, Ill.
Gentlemen:—Yours of the 6th inst. received. I thank you for your congratulations upon my success in the Carnation Show held here in Milwaukee. As to the information you desire about my range of greenhouses, will state that I have four houses, each 28 x 200 feet, with a total of over 27,000 sq. ft. of glass. I can get all the pipes warm in thirty minutes with one of your No. 13 boilers, and it is very easy firing. Can fire just as easy with screenings as with lump coal. Last season I used 140 tons of coal and I think the Kroeschell boilers are the best boilers a florist can buy.

A NEW HOSE.

Greenhouse owners will be interested in a hose of special construction lately placed on the market. The question of obtaining a satisfactory article that would stand the wear and tear of greenhouse work has long been discussed by users and a hose that would not kink, burst or wear through the cover has not yet been obtained at a reasonable price. The Mineralized Rubber Co., New York, has a hose which seems to fill the requirements of greenhouse work, being constructed of a number of plies of fine duck, making kinking impossible, and an extra heavy cover effectually protects it from the wear caused by being drawn around sharp corners of benches, etc. Although it will stand any hydrant pressure, it is as light in weight as almost any hose on the market. Every man who has had to drag a heavy section of hose around will appreciate this last advantage. The saving in weight is accomplished by an ingenious idea. It is a well known fact that the supply of water passing through a hose is governed by the smallest internal diameter of any part of that hose and as the couplings of a $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch hose are $\frac{1}{2}$ inch at the shank the stream is practically reduced to that size. Now the hose that we refer to is made $\frac{1}{2}$ inch throughout except at the ends, which are enlarged to admit a regular $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch coupling, so the size of the stream is not reduced and practically the same amount of water passes as through the ordinary $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch hose.

DENVER, COLO.—J. A. Valentine, of the Park Floral Co., states that he has made an arrangement with N. A. Benson to grow 1,000 Prosperity carnations for him next season, taking all the cut at the uniform price of 8 cents throughout the year.

GREENFIELD, MASS.—E. A. Richards says business this season has been about the same as last year, but that a rather larger Easter trade is expected. Prospects are bright for spring business, as many people have lost their plants during the severe winter.

THE BETTER PLAN.

Which of these two systems of heating with hot water is the better? Run a 4-inch main to the far end of the house and drain with runs of 2-inch pipes under each bench into a 4-inch return at the lower end of the house. Or run a 4-inch flow along the lower end of the house, have a 2-inch outlet from the main supplying a coil of 2-inch pipes under each bench, coming back into a 4-inch return beneath the floor. Is 2-inch too large pipe for the heating coils? J. C. F.

The 4-inch main, or riser, will give a less restricted flow than the 2-inch. It will also give a little more radiation than the two 2-inch pipes. If it is desirable to get the greatest efficiency and the greatest radiation, the 4-inch pipe will prove most satisfactory. In hot water heating with an open circuit it is customary to use flow and return pipes of the same size, usually 3 or 4 inch. With hot water under pressure the coils are frequently made from 1½-inch pipe, and the flow pipes in proportion to the amount of radiation to be supplied. Two-inch pipe is not too large for coils. The size of the pipe is not of as much moment as the square feet of radiation. Neither the size of the house nor the number of feet of heating pipe are stated, so we cannot judge of this proportion. L. C. C.

PIPING.

How much 2-inch pipe will be required to heat a house 16x100? North gutter is six feet, well protected, south wall four and one-half feet with eighteen inches of glass; both ends glass, nine and one-half feet to ridge. Winds from the west are coldest. S. & B.

To maintain a temperature of 70 degrees in the house mentioned with hot water at 180 degrees it will require twelve runs of 2-inch pipe the full length of the house. This house requires 750 feet of radiation, to supply which it requires 1,200 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe. If the water is not maintained at 180 degrees, but runs about 160 degrees, it will require more piping. Fifteen runs the full length of the house will then be required to hold the temperature at 70 degrees. The purpose for which the house is intended is not specified, so I have assumed that 70 degrees would be the maximum temperature required. L. C. C.

The WOLF IMPROVED SYSTEM VENTILATING APPARATUS

Is now operating houses 50 to 740 feet long and is especially adapted to the present style of commercial greenhouses. Is the only system that has proven successful in raising the sash uniform on very long houses, using only one machine, operating from either end or center of house, opening sash on one or both sides of ridge pole, from either top or bottom. Less machines are required, convenience and labor saved in the operation of same, lightness and durability combined.

If you are building a new range and need Ventilating Apparatus of any kind and desire to purchase the most economical machine, estimates will be furnished you with a 10-year guarantee, based upon actual results obtained after seven years' experience in the operation of long houses. The heaviest single line of sash raised by one single machine is equal to one continuous sash 227½ feet long by 4½ feet deep. Send dimensions of your houses, with number, size and position of sash. Prices and catalogue which contains a large list of references will be sent you by return mail.

CAMPBOR AND CUTTINGS.

The following note on the use of camphor for assisting the germination of seeds and the growth of cuttings will be of interest. It is taken from the Dictionary of the Economic Products of India. "Mr. T. W. Lee, writing in the Journal of Agriculture, says that most seeds are greatly hastened in their germination by being soaked, previous to sowing, in soft water, to a pint of which a lump of camphor about the size of a large nut has been added. Mr. Lee tried this experiment on many vegetable seeds, such as peas, beans, etc., as well as palms, castor oil seeds, and various other tropical seeds, which have very hard seed coats, many of which would require soaking in water for a long time before they would otherwise show signs of germination but which with the addition of camphor sprout easily and rapidly. This same fact may be taken advantage of in stimulating cuttings of roses or other plants sent from one country to another. Rose cuttings, for example, posted in England, carry safely to India, and the stimulation caused by dipping their freshly-cut ends in camphor water, helps greatly to enable them to take root when placed in the soil."—Gardeners' Chronicle.

MIDLAND, ONT.—W. G. Winfred was frozen up last fall by reason of the failure to get his heating apparatus installed in time in some new houses, and is now in need of assistance in the way of cuttings, etc., to enable him to make a new start.

ROSE HILL, N. Y.—John Vry, who has for some years been with F. B. Mills, has removed to Lakeland, Minn.

Skinner's Patent System of IRRIGATION.

THE PATENTEE WILL VISIT THE TRADE IN THE EAST IN APRIL AND WILL BE PLEASED TO CALL ON ANYONE INTERESTED.

Under this system we get results that cannot be had under any other method. In the first place we apply the water as uniformly as rain. Secondly, the water is applied so slowly there is no crusting or baking of the soil, and the soil is always loose and porous. This is the reason everything grows so much stronger when watered by our system. Third, we are able to water the whole length of the row at one operation, so that there is no hindrance to cultivation. Fourth, where city water or our gasoline pump is used, there is no time lost in watering; all you have to do is to open the valve and the water is put just where it is wanted. There are many other advantages which we cannot name here but will be glad to explain to anyone interested.

We shall be pleased to send our illustrated circular to all interested and will quote special prices to introduce. Address for further information.....

THE MOST VALUABLE VIOLET TO GROW.....

WHILE DOUBLE VIOLETS have been "dumped" in the leading cities, good singles have been bringing good returns to the grower. The popularity of this Violet is astonishing. I have sold in the city of Boston this winter 1,300,000 blooms without having to make any sacrifice. You can do the same if you have good stock. You cannot afford to have poor stock. I have simply the best stock in the country. I will send out in May strong, transplanted stock for which I am now booking orders at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000. 500 at 1000 rate.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

After the Storm, the Sun.

Few florists will have much time to read until the Easter rush is over. Then there will be breathing time, extreme satisfaction with the general result, we hope, and a new order of work and crops will engage each one's mind and energy.

Utilizing Left-Over Stock.

Very few of the plants we grow for Easter that may be left unsold are worth the room and care to carry them over for another year, yet there are some which are. Let us look over the list. It will depend somewhat on conditions. If you have an abundance of deep, rich, easily worked land at your service you might save the bulbs of tulips, hyacinths and narcissi. After drying them off in the flats, store them away till next October or November and then plant them out. They will give you flowers of a certain quality, yet they are now cut off so close to the bulb, just when the foliage should be nourishing a formation of the new flowering bulb, that it is hardly worth bothering with these old forced bulbs. For years we have dumped the flats in the back yard, where a small army of old women bring their fingers and a basket and leave the soil in good condition to sell for surfacing lawns.

We have never tried planting out the bulbs of the Japan longiflorum, but we have often done this with Lilium Harrisii, that is, with plants that were not cut down too close to the pots, and they have thrown up a good flowering stem in July or August.

Some Useless Plants.

Primula obconica has with us been a most useful late winter and Easter plant. This ends them; unless they are plants of phenomenal color or size of florets don't think of saving them. They are better in every way, particularly in cost, when raised from seed. And just now is a good time to sow. Remember I am speaking of plants only that you may have left over, from one cause or another.

Rhododendrons are perfectly useless to us. In many localities they could be planted out as hardy shrubs. There is so much lime in our soil that the only use we could make of a once forced rhododendron, kalmia or Azalea mollis would be to present it to a customer we had a grudge against. The cytisus is too cheap a plant to carry over, unless it be a very few, and if you do that let them be entirely out of flower and then cut back quite hard. Cut them back into shape and give them a night temperature of 50 degrees and they will make large plants for next year.

A Plant Worth Saving.

Acacia armata is worth saving when the flower is quite gone. Say in three or four weeks cut the last summer's growth back to within three inches of the previous year's growth and they will break and make a new growth that will make the flowering wood for next year. The metrosideros, or bottle brush, requires just about the same treatment.

In treating these shrubs (for shrubs they are, in their native clime) after flowering we must not starve them for want of heat or water, for after the cutting down they make the growth which is to produce the flowers of next season, as do our hardy shrubs, such as the lilac, in the months of June and July.

I scarcely like to say anything about Crimson Rambler roses, yet there may be a few plants of these left and if cut down they will make several strong growths from the base of the plant, which if encouraged to grow and given a shift two months later, would make great plants for another year.

I have seen Astilbe (Spiraea) japonica planted out in several places but it does not amount to anything. Perhaps if you any unsold plants, cut them down to within five or six inches of the pot, give them light and heat and they will make a growth and with plenty of root room will make large plants for another year, too large for any greenhouse forcing unless you have an unusual demand. The hydrangeas rooted this last January or February are the plants for Easter.

The Azaleas.

And now we come to the azalea, I think today the most popular plant we have and the one above all others that it pays to give the best of care to the left-over plants. Year after year our finest flowered plants, particularly the large sizes, are plants that we have had one or two years. The azaleas we import from Belgium are all grown in peat and are potted when they reach here in quite a different soil, for peat is found only in a few localities. But peat is not essential to azaleas, only that being grown in that soil they do not take quickly to the loam that we of necessity have to give them. If given a mixture of loam and leaf soil when received in the fall, and the drainage of the pot is all right, they will thrive in the same pot for three or four years. When the bloom is gone and the foliage is healthy and abundant, shorten back all the growth about half its length.

If you wish the plant to have that rounded shape, which almost all the im-had a cool, moist, black muck you might make it a profitable herbaceous plant, but I have never seen it such, and cut down plants, which you are sure to have plenty of, should be consigned to the dump pile.

Hydrangea Otaksa soon grows to be young "white elephants" and they must be well-grown and sell at a good price to be profitable. If you want to grow on ported plants have, then you cut back the growths to an even surface. But a good many prefer a plant of an irregular or more natural form. If the plant is in a healthy, vigorous state very little cutting back or pinching of the shoots need be done. Merely pinching out the old seed pods will suffice. To repeat, the growth that the azaleas are now making is what later will terminate in a flower bud and give you the blossom for next winter. If you come into possession of some azaleas that have been dried out or abused and have lost their young growth, then take the shears and cut them back hard; never mind if you leave scarcely a leaf on them. Put them into a house at about 55 degrees at night and once or twice a day syringe them and they will surprise you with the number of breaks they will make. I don't want to go into the summer treatment of azaleas just now, so will only say keep them growing in a most genial heat till early June, when they should be plunged outside in the broad sun.

Some Easter Novelties.

We tried several things for Easter this year that we thought would be a novelty in our city and hence profitable. Our experience is already sufficiently advanced to learn that we are out of dollars in cash and labor and space on our benches. Cydonia japonica and Prunus triloba, and I may as well add Wistaria sinensis, are very beautiful in the imagination when well flowered in a 7 or 8-inch pot, but the imagination and anticipation, like many earthly joys, are about all there is of it. Perhaps in communities where wealth is a burden and when well done, these pretty flowering shrubs may be appreciated, but they are very difficult to do well and there are so many other pretty plants and flowers that we can dispense with them. An Ulrich Brunner rose in a 6-inch pot, with a dozen blooms, or a Lawson carnation in a 6-inch pot, with twenty flowers and buds, will outsell them any day.

Don't Overlook the Failures.

Although I have been giving you my views to the very best of my knowledge on how to take care of the plants worth crops. If you had a bench 4x100 of azaleas and every one sold, that would seem good, but if in the same house you had a bench the same size of blind hydrangeas and none sold, it would take all the profit off the azaleas and you may as well not have a greenhouse at all. Some men dislike to discard any old pets. In the terribly keen competition of today you can't afford to have hobbies or favorites unless they bring a revenue, and rather than waste time, labor and costly space with doubtful old plants, pitch them out and grow something you know you are master of. Every time you have a square foot of bench room that returns you nothing you have wiped out the profits of another foot that you are very proud of.

Bedding Plants.

The much needed space is now at hand and those engaged in the bedding plant business will have plenty to do from now on. With us the most important thing will be to get our zonale geraniums shifted from 3 to 4-inch pots. Don't use a light, rich soil or they will go to leaf. Let the soil be a heavy loam, pot firmly and if you have no well decayed manure to add to the soil (about a fifth) then use a 5-inch pot of bone flour to a bushel of soil, but pot firmly.

Poinsettias.

It's about time to bring up the dormant poinsettias that have been resting beneath the bench. Shake off all the old soil and repot in any size that will hold the roots. Cut back to sound, fresh wood and start growing and in five or six weeks you will get cuttings.

Dahlia Cuttings.

Mr. Editor, your Easter Number will be acknowledged by all fair minded persons as the greatest issue of a floricult-when it has "developed three pairs of leaves," he does not say whether it should be taken off the tuber with a so-called "heel" or not. And he does not say whether or not the cutting, if it is minus the heel, should be cut at or just below a joint. Immaterial as it is to cut most soft-wooded cuttings at a joint, I have always been led to suppose that unless a dahlia cutting was cut at the joint it would make roots but never form tubers. Is that right or is it a fallacy, Mr. Peacock?

ALEXANDER MONTGOMERY.

In conferring the presidency upon Alexander Montgomery, of Natick, Mass., the members of the American Rose Society in annual session at Philadelphia last week did credit to themselves and their organization, for their choice is one who has labored long for the rose, and accomplished much, a man of the trade than whom there are few indeed who have contributed more largely to the advancement of commercial rose growing in America.

Like so many of our best men, Mr. Montgomery is a native of the land of the heather, born in 1848, at Port William in the south of Scotland. The son of a gardener, he served an apprenticeship at the trade on the estate of the Earl of Galloway, later becoming gardener at Dysart House, the seat of the Earl of Roslyn. Until he was 24 he spent his time on various private places in England, arriving at Boston in 1872. Here he worked at gardening on several estates, notably that of Wm. Gray, whom he brought into the front rank of exhibitors at the Boston shows. It was in 1880 that he joined forces with E. M. Wood, at the Waban Rose Conservatories, Natick, then a small place, but since grown to be one of the largest and most famous rose growing establishments in the country. Just prior to Mr. Wood's death the business was placed on a corporate footing, the present official heads being Robert S. Minot, president; George Burroughs, treasurer, and Mr. Montgomery, general superintendent.

When Mr. Montgomery first became identified with commercial rose growing the long-stemmed rose as now produced in such quantities was unknown in the cut flower markets. Marechal Niel and General Jacqueminot were the principal growing for another year, it is up to each one individually to think for himself how best he can utilize the space he has under glass and has to pay for coal to heat. The plantsman who makes money is the one who grows his plants the nearest to perfection and sells out clean on all his tural journal that has ever happened up to date, in this broad land, or any other land. The article by Mr. Peacock on "The Propagation of the Dahlia" is only one of the many good things. Just as Mr. Peacock gets down to that fine point and tells you to take the cutting varieties grown at Waban. This was in the day when Jacq. was sold wired on toothpicks and disbudding to secure flower and stem was Mr. Montgomery's suggestion. He also did Cornelia Cook to such perfection that his flowers were the sensation of that early day.

But floriculture owes probably its greatest debt to Mr. Montgomery for the part he bore in introducing Catherine Mermet, brought out in France by Guillot & Sons, in 1869. Mr. Montgomery had what may have been the first 500 plants grown in this country. He was equally as successful with this as his other subjects and did much to cause its wide dissemination. And Mermet has done more for the rose industry than any other variety, as from it sprang both Bride and Bridesmaid, from the introduction of which, in 1885 and 1892 respectively, the development of the rose-growing industry may almost be said to date. Indeed, it is difficult to see how the present-day proportions of our business could have been attained had it not been for the strong blood of these varieties.

Mr. Montgomery was an early advocate of grafted stock, having been one of the first, if not the very first, to experiment largely in this direction, some years before the subject was taken up for general discussion. Now grafted Brides and Maids are the principal varieties grown under the 300,000 feet of glass at Waban. Other varieties are Beauty, Liberty, Golden Gate, Ivory and Mrs. Morgan, the latter in good quantity.

Chrysanthemums are also a specialty here and are grown to perfection, it being on record that the flowers have upon occasion brought as high as $1 a bloom in the Boston market. Valley and asparagus may also be mentioned as among the items grown.

Mr. Montgomery married, as all good gardeners do, and has three sons and two daughters, the eldest son, Alexander, Jr., a graduate of Amherst, being associated with his father as assistant superintendent at Waban. Mr. Montgomery's friends say that the son is "a chip off the old block," for he, too, is an enthusiast on the rose, having done much careful hybridizing to so good result that he has a pink seedling which will soon be heard from, doubtless in a year or two.

URGE A COMBINED MEETING.

The following is the communication of the committee of the American Carnation Society presented to last week's meeting of the American Rose Society, arguing that the exhibitions of the two societies should be held in the same city and on practically the same dates. This was supplemented by an invitation from the Chicago Florists' Club, but the sentiment of the rosarians seems to have been unanimous against leaving the east. Possibly the purpose of the committee may be accomplished upon occasion when the Carnation Society again goes east:

TO THE AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY: The American Carnation Society, by its committee, sends greeting, and asks for a thoughtful consideration of and a friendly response to the following statement and invitation.

At the annual meeting of the American Carnation Society held in Detroit, March 2 and 3, the society adopted the following:

RESOLVED, That the chair shall appoint a committee of three to confer with the American Rose Society at its approaching meeting and induce the said Rose Society, if possible, to hold its next meeting in the same city with this society and upon the days immediately preceding or immediately following the meeting of this society, or upon the same days if deemed advisable.

Under this resolution the chair appointed the undersigned as such committee and we most sincerely urge you to accept the invitation.

While some of the members of each society are only directly interested in the rose or in the carnation, as the case may be, the majority of the members are interested alike in the one flower and in the other. Nearly all such members feel heavily the expense and loss of time involved in attending one convention, and are unable to attend both meetings when they are held in separate cities as has been the custom heretofore.

The attendance upon the meetings of each society ought to be largely increased and doubtless many florists who have never attended either meeting will be attracted by an opportunity to witness such a display as would be brought out by the joint efforts of our two societies. Good fellowship would be promoted and the membership of each society largely augmented.

Many new and interesting carnation seedlings are displayed each year and a joint exhibition would tend to stimulate and encourage those who are working for the production of new varieties of roses, and would doubtless induce others to take up this line of work. Such a result would redound to the credit of your society and would be a benefit to the trade at large.

We firmly believe that a joint exhibition of our two societies will be so attractive that the local club in the place of meeting would be justified in charging an admission fee, which would lighten the burden of entertainment.

The next meeting of the American Carnation Society will be held in the city of Chicago, the exact date to be determined by the board of directors, they having been requested by the society to select a date either in the last week of January or in the first week of February. We hope you will see fit to meet with us in Chicago and that you will authorize some person or committee to confer with us to the end that arrangements may be made best suited to the convenience of both societies.

Assuring you that the American Carnation Society as a body is deeply interested in your success, we beg to subscribe ourselves,

Cordially yours,

J. A. VALENTINE,
E. G. HILL,
E. DAILLEDOUZE,
Committee.

SOCIAL FEATURES OF ROSE SHOW.

The banquet tendered by the Florists' Club of Philadelphia to the American Rose Society was a great success. The menu card was a gem of its kind, the literary quotations appended to each toast being exceedingly appropriate and the whole a great credit to the man who constructed it. The genial inventor of the world famous Westcott Punch, the president of the club, presided. As customary the wittiest toastmaster of the city, ex-Mayor Smith, again enlivened the evening with his rare good humor and his quick impromptu sallies as he introduced the speakers. His is "the smile that won't come off." His good nature was infectious.

Henry A. Siebrecht responded to "Our Honored Guests." His theme was the Rose Society, its work, influence and future. His eloquent speech was heartily applauded. Wm. F. Gude, of Washington, the youngest ex-president of the S. A. F., gave a patriotic and stirring oration to the toast "Our Country." J. Otto Thilow, of H. A. Dreer Co., made his maiden effort and surprised all with his flow of language and the strong, earnest ring of enthusiastic devotion to his subject, "Horticulture." In the absence of President Breitmeyer, his brother Fred had a few pleasant remarks to offer on the subject of "Floriculture" and acquitted himself well.

The Demosthenes of the trade, the eloquent Robert Craig, gave an address of rare pathos and beauty to the toast of "The Rose," the hearts of all present going out to him in sympathy and good will. He received an ovation. Wm. K. Harris, the deacon of the cult, whose years sit lightly, was in rare good humor and gave a brief address to the toast, "Ourselves; Who's Like Us?" Dr. Geo. Goebel descanted modestly on the virtues of his profession, to the toast of "Our Preservers" and Patrick O'Mara did himself and New York proud in a brilliant address to the comprehensive toast "The Twentieth Century." John Burton's beautiful tribute to "The Absent" was listened to with appreciative interest. A silent toast was given to those who had passed away.

Informal addresses were made by the new president of the society, Alexander Montgomery; by Benj. Hammond, of Fishkill; A. H. Langjahr, of New York, Mr. Butterworth, and many others. A poem on the rose prepared for the occasion was read by the writer and the "Press" was responded to by W. J. Stewart, of Boston. The whole affair was a credit to the efficient committee, which was composed of John Westcott, Wm. K. Harris, Edwin Lonsdale, J. Wm. Colflesh, Robert Kift, Geo. Craig, Geo. C. Watson and David Rust.

Some splendid music and solos were rendered by an artist specially engaged for the evening and the songs of Messrs. Butterworth and Lonsdale involved the whole company in the chorus.

The bowling contest at Philadelphia on Wednesday afternoon, between teams from Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia was a very interesting event and some grand scores were made, several going over the 200 mark and one or two making better than 240. Each city will have a great team at St. Louis. As usual the courtesy of winning was generously accorded Philadelphia by the visitors. The alleys are superb and the enthusiasm was music to the strangers' ears.

THE ROSE.

They say a rose by any other name would smell as sweet,
But, don't you know, it seems to me that name is hard to beat.
I've tried a dozen others, while inhaling its perfume;
I've called it, O a hundred names, enraptured by its bloom!
But after all I must confess, and you will I suppose,
There's not a name can just as deftly touch your hearts, as Rose.

Try calling it a "violet" and realize how blue
A name like that would make you feel; I'm sure 'twould never do.
And even the "carnation" name, don't seem to fit at all.
Nor "lily" fair, nor maidenhair, no name amongst them all,
There's nothing anywhere, me thinks, that Old Dame Nature grows,
In fruit or flower, on tree or bower, that's half so sweet as Rose.

Her children fair and beautiful come tripping o'er the lea.
Not one of all but finds a warm embrace from you and me.
There's dear old Jacq and Marechal Niel, and modest Bon Silene;
And stately Mermet Catherine and Edgely's queenly Queen,
And glorious Beauty, which is still the sweetest flower that blows;
But, after all, no name appeals to me like Mother Rose.

O! What a lovely family the dear old lady's reared,
Since the first rose, with blushing face in Eden's bower appeared.
Such children these, so pure, so proud, so beautiful, every girl
And boy of them, what e'er their age, from Uncle John to Perle;
Miss Liberty, the gay brunette, and her Bridesmaid; I suppose,
All proud to bend their heads in reverence to Mother Rose.

Some with a touch of Irish blood and some that need no blarney,
Like Siebrecht's Belle and Chatenay and ever
dear Killarney.
While strolling lovingly along with coquetry adroit,
Behold angelic maiden, Bride, and her new love, Detroit.
A family reunion, this, as everybody knows;
Let's join the happy company and drink to Mother Rose.

If I could be a boy again, my first sweetheart would be A laughing, blushing little angel, frolicsome and free.
I wouldn't ask her pedigree, nor bother whence she came,
But confidentially, I tell you, Rose would be her name.

If I should ever marry one of Eve's fair daughters, say,
I swear, it wouldn't be because she's wealthy, anyway.
Of course a little money, just for comfort and protection,
And stately form, brown eyes and pearly teeth are no objection.
But when you look the records up, I tell you just the same,
You'll surely find it written there that Rosie was her name.

And if, as happens often, later on a stork should come
And in a basket bring a little one to bless the home,
I wouldn't then investigate, not while the nurse was 'round,
Nor care what sex might afterwards by accident be found;
But cuddling Mother Rosie's face right close to mine, I'd say,
"No matter, boy or girl, dear, Rose, let's call it anyway."

When I and all most dear come to the "parting of the way," Life's happy journey ended and night's shadow on my day,
If this earthly habitation you to Mother Earth
consign,
And examining the records, you should find no blot on mine,
Then, I pray you, see the silent home wherein my clay reposes,
Is perpetually kept a-bloom through all the years, with roses.

And if, perchance, my soul immortal reaches Heaven's gate,
And Sir Peter should permit me any preference to state,
I'll ask him to direct me where the florists' gardens blossom.
Not the section where carnations reign, not the odontoglossom,
But the place of many mansions where each florist's soul reposes,
Just the sweetest part of Heaven, just the homeplace of the Roses.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

Seasonable Notes.

After Easter we usually look for warmer weather, and where Easter comes about the second or third Sunday in April we can do with very little fire heat afterward in this section. Right here I want to remind you that whenever you apply these notes to your own place, you must consider first whether your climatic conditions are the same as ours and act accordingly. For instance, if Mr. Scott would try to follow them to the letter he would find himself very often just about three weeks ahead of time. I am sure he would not think of stopping firing for his carnations before May, or later, and if we would start some of our plants and sow our seeds on the dates he recommends we would often find ourselves way behind the season. Mr. Scott's Seasonable Hints are very useful to us indeed, but we must always keep from two to three weeks ahead of his dates. You will find it necessary invariably when following the advice of others to change the dates according to whether you are in the same climatic zone as the writer. Indianapolis would come in a class with St. Louis, Columbus, Pittsburg and possibly Cincinnati, O., while Chicago, Cleveland and Buffalo are fully two weeks later and Louisville, Ky., and others in line with it are fully ten days ahead of us. When I write I take Indianapolis as a base to work on and you can judge for yourself how the date should be changed to suit your locality. Always bear this in mind.

But to return to our knitting. Easter comes tolerably early this year and unless we have a big change from the kind of weather we are having this week we will not be able to take off our night man for a few weeks. Of course, we will have a cool night occasionally, which will necessitate a little fire heat and arrangements should be made to give it when it is necessary. Those who grow roses need not give this matter so much thought as the grower who grows carnations only. The former has to keep up his fires way into the summer and the fireman will turn on or off the pipes in the carnation houses as they are needed, but when it is a question of keeping the night man on duty at night regularly when fire heat will be needed only one or two nights in a week is quite another question. We are always glad to change the night man to day duty at the very earliest opportunity, not only because of the saving in wages and fuel, but also because from now on the work is piling up and all hands are kept on the jump to keep things in shape.

The houses should never be allowed to run down much below the proper temperature, else you will have a big crop of split calyxes and the saving in fuel and wages will be more than eaten up by ruined blooms through splitting.
Whenever there is no fire heat the houses should never be closed tight, but there should be at least an inch of air on and in fact that much air can always be left on at this time of the season, as it will not lower the temperature much, while it will do the plants great good. I would rather have the temperature at 48 degrees with an inch of air on than at 52 degrees with no air and no fire heat.
Also be sure you do your watering early enough so the plants will be dry when night comes, and keep the walks as dry

House of Longiflorum Lilies Grown by Weber Bros., Chicago, Photographed March 21, 1904.

as possible, too. These things will keep the dampness from rising during a cool night and far less damage will result from a sudden drop in the temperature during the night. Of course, every wet, rainy night will call for fire heat to keep the houses dry, even if it requires a couple of inches of air to keep the temperature down. A. F. J. BAUR.

A HOUSE OF LILIES.

The accompanying illustration is a reproduction of a very fine photograph of a remarkable house of lilies at the establishment of Weber Bros., north of Chicago. This is the house which J. F. Ammann, of St. Louis, pronounced six weeks ago to be the best lot of lilies he ever saw and certainly they have come along in fine shape and are a testimonial to the skill of the growers. A more even lot could hardly be asked for. These are longiflorums, 7 to 9 bulbs and were supplied by W. W. Barnard & Co. E. C. Amling sells the Weber output and had most of this stock ordered up well in advance.

GEORGE FANCOURT.

It was a great shock to learn of the untimely death of George Fancourt, of Kingston, Pa., which occurred on Sunday morning, March 27. And we of Buffalo are but a few who will mourn his death, for he was widely known in the large cities of the east. George was a frequent visitor to our city, and it can be most truthfully said that to know him was to love him. Gifted far above the average man, a lover of the best literature, eloquent, witty, generous, broad-minded and, withal, a gardener and florist of the first water, he was highly esteemed and respected in the community in which he lived.

Mr. Fancourt had within a few years built an entirely new range of houses, some 50,000 feet, but the climate of the Wyoming valley not agreeing with the health of his family, he sold his estate to Mr. Marvin, of Wilkesbarre. A month ago he made up his mind to make Spokane his future home. He told the writer that floriculture in that far off state was yet in its infancy, but he believed "the star of empire glittered in the west" and if not best for him it was giving his sons and daughters a better chance in the world and he would go. And this day, March 29, they were to start on their long journey. Two weeks ago on his return home from the west he spent a day with us all and seemed bright and cheery, with only perhaps a little indecision whether to take that long journey or accept a very fine position offered him in one of our lake cities. It seems, however, he had decided to go to Spokane. His death, or its cause, is and perhaps ever will be a mystery. Life is a mystery and what comes after is still a greater. George had a proud, independent spirit and who will ever know the wounds that spirit received and who will ever know the many kind acts that he extended to his less fortunate brother men, friends or not, for his was a nature most happy when making others happy. We have the deepest sympathy for his stricken wife and family, two sons and two daughters, just growing into man and womanhood.

The writer believes he knew George Fancourt as few did know him. He admired him for his gifted mind, for his independent spirit and his generous, yet fearless character. We have lost a dear and valued friend and our profession has lost a bright star. He never sought prominence in our trade societies, although well fitted to adorn any office, unselfish to the last degree.

"And e'en his failings leaned to virtue's side."

BEGINNINGS

THE STANDING CROSS.

The Frame.

In preparing to make a large standing piece, as is pictured here, it is well to have in mind a few hints about selecting the frame. Not only is the broad base essential to the looks of the piece, but also to its ability to stand alone. A cross such as we propose to discuss today is probably four to six feet high. No attempt should be made to construct a small piece after this style. To properly balance a design of this height or over, the base should be almost, if not altogether, as broad as the distance across the arms. Otherwise the upright piece may lean or twist, and give the spectators a very uncomfortable sensation, even if there is no danger of a fall. To guard against any such danger, we have sometimes taken the precaution to have our wire worker extend the cross frame down to the bottom of the base, instead of wiring it to the top of the frame, as is safe enough to do with a light, small design.

A word here in regard to compactness in the construction of floral designs. Never consider a piece finished until it can be handled or shipped without danger of displacing one flower or leaf. The first step in securing this safe condition is the critical inspection of the frame to see that it is well balanced and proportioned. A round base and the ordinary flat frame are used here.

Filling.

Set the empty frame upright before you. Cover the inside bottom of the base with the lining of wood ferns, as was done in the base of the broken column. Next fill the base solidly with sphagnum and wrap over the top as before. It is not necessary to use the best of the wood ferns for this purpose; culls, broken fronds and second class stock will do, although it takes more of them than of good ferns. Often the wood ferns that have been badly wilted may be made as good as new by being plunged in water, frond and stem, and left there over night. Watch these odds and ends. Clean them all up for these purposes, rather than throw them in the trash box.

Now, lay the empty cross down on its back, allowing the base to extend out beyond the edge of the work table, so that the cross itself may lie perfectly flat and not bend the frame. Line the inside of the frame all around with the ferns and fill with sphagnum. Wrap the face of the cross frame with lacings of hemp about three inches apart.

Again place the frame upright ready for the flowers. Cut the picks and prepare the carnations, or whatever suitable background flowers are to be used, in the same way as was done for the broken column. Fill the cross solid with the carnations, precisely as in the case of the main part of the shaft. Cover all sides of the cross, if the price will allow. If not, cover the front and edges.

Trimming.

In the engraving there is a garland extending from the right end of the left arm across the center of the cross to the lower left hand corner of the right arm, from that point along the right side of the body of the cross, disappearing, and reappearing a little farther up on the left side, and falling to the base on the same side. The same general instructions as applied to the construction of the rose garland in the last study will apply to any other garland, except that in handling softer stems more care must be exercised to prevent breaking and crushing them.

There is another way of producing this garland effect, besides making the garland completely before fastening it in its place on the piece: Stem the flowers separately on three-quarter picks, leaving their stems four or five inches long. Insert the stemmed end into the sphagnum on the back of the frame, with the flower at an angle of about forty-five degrees to the upright piece of the frame. Let the flower stalk be bent around the frame toward the front, and be fastened in its place with a tie of No. 36 wire drawn so tightly around the body of the frame that it disappears between the background flowers. The flowers on the left side are inserted on the side of the frame, instead of on the back, and are erect. But they will need the same fastening as the others. Continue this garland effect down to the base on the left side, thickening it gradually as it approaches the lower end.

Next cover the base over the sphagnum with wood ferns laid flat, all around, back, front and sides, and extending out several inches beyond the edge.

Many other flowers might be used in trimming the base but they should have stems one to two feet long. To stem lilies, Harrisii and its kind, insert a whole pick half way up inside of the stem from the bottom. If the stem does not split, that is all the work that is needed. But if the stem does split, wrap with No. 24 wire, as you would a rose with No. 36 wire. Stem irises the same way as the lilies, except a little more carefully, as they have softer stems if they are from forced stock. We often find this class of flowers so soft that they cannot be stemmed. In such a case bore a deep hole in the sphagnum, plant the stem in it and repack the moss hard around it. But this could not be done with any considerable number of flowers together. Instead of grouping the irises and lilies, as was done in the base of the broken column, the base here is filled in all around. A few fall over the edge on the front and sides.

The large leaves used are those of the Cycas revoluta. Many florists use the dried and painted leaves, but it seems to me that the leaves in their natural state are much to be preferred. Wash them and rub vigorously with a woolen cloth and you will get a polish which is far superior to the painted glaze. Sharpen the lower end of the stem and it will be ready for inserting into the base. No artificial stem is needed. Cycas revoluta, as its variety name indicates, throws its leaves out in circular form, and this is the most significant hint we can obtain as to their correct arrangement in the base of the design. Close to the lower end of the cross, push the sharpened ends into the sphagnum as far as they will go, in a circular position, the larger leaves at the back. Relieve the set appearance of the front of the base with a cluster of wood ferns. Stem them in groups, three or four to a pick, around it in a circle, and wired on like the bunches of sweet alyssum, except that their thin, wiry stems may be placed regularly or irregularly on the pick, as is most convenient.

Critical Notes

It would not detract from the richness and dignity of this arrangement to have varied the lengths of stem of the flowers in the base considerably, and also to have grouped the two or three kinds of flowers a little more closely, according to their kind. By this I mean clustering the lilies more nearly together, and the irises by themselves, that is, the bulk of them. Then to relieve the stiffness to which the extreme of this arrangement tends, scatter a smaller number of the two kinds between the groups, and blend the opposite kinds, as a painter blends his various colors into a harmonious whole. A good example of this kind of trimming was seen in the base trimming of the broken column in our last study.

The larger and smaller kinds of flowers in the upper end of the garland change too abruptly. The finer flowers should extend farther down into the larger spray on one side, while a scattering cluster of the larger flowers below should be carried up farther into the fine spray that points the garland.

Going back to the base again if the lilies used are Harrisii or longiflorum, the stalks with buds would be more stately than the individually stemmed flowers.

GERTRUDE BLAIR.

A NEW WHITE ASTER.

At the Milwaukee convention of the S. A. F. last August one of the exhibits which attracted no little attention was a vase of a new white aster shown by C. A. Olmstead, of East Bloomfield, N. Y. This is now being introduced as Olmstead's White Commercial. Speaking of it Mr. Olmstead says:

The new aster has a stem fifteen to eighteen inches long, slightly curved, bearing the flower gracefully to one side, and of sufficient strength to support the blooms. In size and form it is distinct from all others. With good field culture I have raised hundreds of blooms that were seven inches in diameter, full to the center, and with four to five other large ones on the same plant; but the average size, under outdoor cultivation, is about four and one-half inches, five to seven blooms on each plant. They are of unusual form, pure white and good keepers.

We find the REVIEW essential to a well regulated florists' business.—H. R. MITCHELL & SON, Waterville, Me.

WICHITA, KAN.—A. T. Buckeridge has several promising seedling carnations, some of which he thinks as good as Mrs. Lawson.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—Henry Smith has recently returned from a somewhat lengthy European trip. He is the superintendent of the New York State Fair.

MIDLAND, MICH.—E. C. Thayer has built a greenhouse of 1,800 square feet and installed a steam heating plant. It is a new departure for this town.

THE SPRING SHOW AT BOSTON.

The annual spring exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, which closed on March 27, was one of the best the society has ever held. The arrangement was excellent and that the general public appreciated the improvement shown was evidenced by the large attendance on all fair days.

The cut flowers were displayed in the lecture hall and made a fine showing. Roses were shown by only a few exhibitors, but the quality was superb. Waban Rose Conservatories were first for American Beauties, F. R. Pierson Co. being second. In the "any other variety" class Waban Rose Conservatories took first and second with splendid vases of Golden Gate and Ivory. John N. May showed his new rose, General MacArthur, of very pleasing color, but not in the estimation of the judges equal to Liberty. For hybrids Col. Charles Pfaff won all the prizes.

Carnations made a superb show and the quality was first-class. For vase of 100 blooms, six varieties, Wm. Nicholson won with a magnificent vase, M. A. Patten being second and Wilfred Wheeler third. For light pink Wm. Nicholson was first with Enchantress and M. A. Patten second, with the same variety. For third place J. W. Foote won with Fair Maids which beat half a dozen other entries of Enchantress. In crimson Harry Fenn took all the prizes, M. A. Patten, S. J. Goddard and Wilfred Wheeler winning in the order named. Mrs. Lawson monopolized the dark pink class, Mr. Patten taking first place, followed by L. E. Small and E. A. & W. K. Wood. In scarlets M. A. Patten won first and second with Adonis and J. H. Manley, L. E. Small being third also with Manley.

In a good class of whites Wm. Nicholson won with his fine Governor Wolcott, H. A. Stevens being second with the same variety and M. A. Patten third, with Boston Market. For yellow Patten was first with Dorothy Whitney, Backer & Co. being second with Eldorado. E. A. & W. K. Wood won on variegated with Gaiety.

For pansies Mrs. E. M. Gill and J. R. Comley won. Violets were not so well shown as usual. For 100 Campbells N. F. Comley, Malcolm Orr and George Melvin won. N. F. Comley and J. A. Beebe had the best Marie Louise. For any other double N. F. Comley took first and second with Neapolitan and Swanley White. For 100 singles Wm. Sim was easily first, N. F. Comley second and Geo. Melvin third, all showing Princess of Wales.

For the best display of cut orchids, Peter Murray, gardener to W. P. Winsor, won the Appleton silver gilt medal with a fine display of 120 bottles. Geo. Melvin, gardener to Col. Chas Pfaff, won the silver medal.

There were numerous miscellaneous exhibits. A few of the best were: Chester Roper carnation from A. Roper, the raiser of the popular Fair Maid, a beautiful variegated variety of pleasing form, awarded a certificate of merit. White Lawson from F. R. Pierson Co. received a similar award. This is not as pure a white as could be desired, but it will doubtless sell well, thanks in a large part to its name. John N. May's new variety, The Bride, received honorable mention. It is not equal to L. E. Small's seedling white, No. 3, which received the same award. S. J. Goddard's seedling, Helen Goddard, received honorable mention. It is just the ideal carnation in form, of good size and is a fine rosy pink color. This variety, as well as Mr. Small's seedling, will no doubt receive a higher award at some future show. Other seedlings were shown by A. Roper and Miss E. J. Clark, John Ash, gardener.

Peter Fisher showed large vases of Mrs. M. A. Patten and Nelson Fisher of his usual high quality. M. A. Patten also showed 100 handsome Mrs. M. A. Patten. The same exhibitor showed some fine zonale pelargoniums. William Sim had large vases of magnificent sweet peas, Mont Blanc and Blanche Ferry, receiving a cultural commendation for the same, also splendid Princess of Wales violets. Mrs. S. M. Sears showed Gardenia florida and Mrs. E. M. Gill a miscellaneous display.

The display of pot plants was quite extensive, entirely filling the large exhibition hall as well as part of the loggia and lecture hall. In the classes for bulbous plants the most successful competitors were E. A. Clark, Wm. Riggs, gardener; the Bussey Institution and Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher, gardener. Cyclamens were again up to Boston's high standard, plants in 10-inch pots carrying 150 to 200 blooms each. Cinerarias were also of splendid quality. The leading prize winners in these classes were Geo. F. Fabyan, James Stuart, gardener; E. A. Clark, Wm. Riggs, gardener; E. J. Mitton, J. Lawson, gardener, and Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher, gardener. For six Azalea indica prizes went to E. W. Breed, E. McMullin and J. A. Beebe. For six ericas, Louis Dupuy was first. M. H. Walsh was first and second for specimen rose with large, grandly flowered specimens of his new ramblers, Sweetheart and Lady Gay. T. D. Hatfield, gardener to Walter Hunnewell, had a superb display of amaryllises, filling a long table. He secured first for ten plants.

For specimen orchid, W. P. Winsor won with a piece of Odontoglossum Rossii majus, carrying forty flowers. Col. Chas. Pfaff and E. J. Mitton followed, each showing Dendrobium nobile. For general display of spring bulbs and plants the Bussey Institution was first with a capital assortment well grown. The same exhibitors had ten large tables filled with a display of forced shrubs, native plants and plants in bloom which was extremely interesting. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. had an extensive, beautifully arranged bank of bulbous plants intermixed with palms, Isolepis gracilis, panicum and lycopodium. Robert Cameron, from the Harvard Botanical Gardens, put up a fine group of palms, Prima obconica, some 200 plants of the latter; imantophyllums, etc. Included was a big specimen of Echinocactus Visnaga which received a botanical certificate. T. D. Hatfield had a similar award for Amorphophallus Rivieri, a mammoth aroid.

Julius Roehrs had a circular group of palms, orchids, anthuriums, etc. A rather scarce palm Livistona Woodwardii received honorable mention. Louis Dupuy had a well-grown group of ericas, marguerites, hydrangeas, genistas, etc. Hydrangea Hortensis rosea received a certificate of merit. If it holds its bright pink color for any length of time it will be a decided acquisition. E. W. Converse, Robert Marshall, gardener, had a fine group of palms, cyclamens and Prima obconica.

F. R. Pierson Co. showed for the first time their new sport from Nephrolepis Piersoni, which was greatly admired. Mr. Pierson thinks bipinnatifida would be a good name to describe the plant, but a shorter and more catchy one would be better. The plant received a certificate of merit and may score higher if shown again. The general opinion was that it was a better thing than N. Piersoni but that it was perhaps too dense to please some.

J. E. Rothwell had a fine display of orchids, including odontoglossums, oncidiums, cypripediums, etc., arranged with *adiantum*s. Lager & Hurrell had an extra good display of orchids, which comprised most of the seasonable varieties. Their dendrobiums were extra good and the quality throughout up to the firm's usual excellence. E. O. Orpet, gardener to E. V. R. Thayer, showed several seedling orchids, one of which Cattleya x Katherinae (C. Warneri x C. Schroederæ alba) received a certificate of merit. J. S. Bailey, J. Nylan, gardener, contributed a group of dendrobiums.

Last but by no means least, M. H. Walsh put up a magnificent group of beautifully flowered specimens of his new seedling rambler roses, covering nearly 1,000 square feet of space. Many of these plants were in tubs, six feet high and as much across, and it must have been a considerable task to transport them from Woods Hole in such fine condition. Certificates of merit were awarded to the varieties Wedding Bells and Babette. Other varieties shown included Sweetheart, Minnehaha, Lady Gay, La Fiana, Debutante and Hiawatha. These have already received recognition from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. It is a pity the American Rose Society could not have enjoyed this unique exhibit.

Various Items.

March came in like a lion and according to the old saw should go out like a lamb. But it has been more like a polar bear throughout the month and at this moment reminds one of a sea lion basking or barking in the sunshine on top of a slowly melting iceberg. Sunday a snowstorm and the mercury down to 10 degrees above, yet "Hope springs eternal in the human breast, Man never is, but always to be, blest." Those immortal words were written about 160 years ago and human nature is just the same as it was then. Behavior may be better? When hope vanishes we are lost and gone and life worth living is extinct. We are creatures of the climate we live in and while the rigors and vicissitudes of our northern clime are trying to comfort, as we look upon them, it makes hardy, vigorous, industrious, ambitious men that dominate the world for its betterment, only don't go much farther north than the wheat fields of Manitoba or you will become a musk ox or blubber eating Eskimo.

Hope is springing very lively just now that Easter will be a good, rich harvest and if the elements favor us I believe it will. There are a great number of good plants, home grown, to supply the expected call and, if they are not sufficient, Mr. Kasting has gathered together an enormous stock of everything desirable in his new and more than capacious quarters on Ellicott street.

W. J. Palmer has a splendid stock of popular plants. S. A. Anderson has a fine lot of lilies and azaleas. J. H. Rebstock is good all around and particularly strong in hybrid roses and Ramblers. Mrs. Schoenhut's four or five houses are crammed with Easter stuff. D. R. Newlands Co. has lilies, azaleas and bulbous stuff in good order and the William Scott Co. has plenty for its own trade and some to spare.

Then there are the growers of Williamsville, East Aurora, Corfu, Pineridge and other neighboring towns, all contributing, so there is not likely to be a scarcity.

I have not heard of any marked specialty this year except that Dennis O'Connell has gone heavy into standard shamrocks grown in the fossil hoofs of the great extinct Irish elk. James Buxton has made a feature of 6-inch pans of Venus' fly trap (Dionaea muscipula). This is not a showy plant, but it is one of those interesting vegetable creations that enabled the great and immortal Darwin to write his last great work, "Insectivorous Plants" and philosophical students will undoubtedly prefer these pans to a gaudy azalea.

I am scarcely able to say much about cut flowers. We are inclined to think there will be an abundance. We are just about as others report on Beauties, lots in sight but two weeks more would have suited them better. If people want violets they can have them and moderate in price. Carnations are likely to be again the most popular flower with the majority and the home-grown product is in fine order. Bulbous stock is never a strong feature at Easter, but there is lots of it. Golden Spur, Emperor and Empress narcissi are taking well this year.

The Lakeview Rose Gardens, of Jamestown, with their acres of Easter plants, are likely to have an influence on our local trade, but there are some plants, notably lilies, that are difficult to ship by rail.

Mr. Slattery, late of Byrne & Slattery, is now with W. J. Palmer & Son, at the old store. This greatly strengthens Mr. Palmer's force.

Michael Bloy, late of the Essex Greenhouses, near Cleveland, is in town resting on his laurels, not like Micawber, waiting for "something to turn up," but contemplating which of the many flattering offers he will accept.

The William Scott Co. has leased for a term of years the greenhouse lately vacated by Wm. Legg, on Delaware avenue, near the entrance to Forest Lawn cemetery. When a sewer is put in, and a heater, and a general overhauling given, it will be quite a place.

Harry Bunyard and Mr. Kasting called Sunday evening on their return from a visit to Friend Christensen in the wilds of Eggertsville. Harry charmed our home circle with his puns and witticisms and metropolitan brightness.

I wish sincerely a most prosperous and happy Easter for all. W. S.

THE McCARTHY ESTABLISHMENT.

The accompanying illustration shows a greenhouse erected for N. F. McCarthy & Co., Wakefield, Mass., in 1902. It was built of Lord & Burnham Co.'s improved iron frame construction covered with cypress capping. The rafters are fastened to cast iron foot pieces which extend about two feet below the grade line. A galvanized iron eave plate runs the whole length of the house on either side. To this eave plate the sash bars are fastened by patent sash bar clasps. There are two continuous lines of top ventilating sashes which are three feet wide and are operated by the Lord & Burnham Co. self-oiling apparatus. The ventilators, as well as all the other wood work, are of the best quality cypress. This is in every sense a modern greenhouse, from which good results are obtained.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions are not materially changed, the market being well supplied with all kinds of flowers. A number of large parties and charity fairs have materially assisted in preventing a glut. Roses, carnations and violets are cleared out tolerably well, but there is far too much bulbous stock. Prospects are for an extra good Easter trade. Lilies are being offered at from $12 to $15 per 100. Some warm days have helped backward stock, but many plants will not be in season.

Various Items.

A large delegation of growers and other invited guests visited the establishment of W. W. Edgar, of Waverley, March 23, to view Mr. Edgar's annual Easter display. Everything was found in fine condition, two houses of lilies containing 7,000 plants being extra fine. Genistas, Rambler roses, acacias, marguerites, hydrangeas and other seasonal stock was all good.

The annual spring show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society brought many visitors from a distance. Next year when the Rose Society meets with us we will expect many more and will show them what Bostonians can do in the way of an exhibition. Walsh's rose exhibit at our last show would have been a revelation to many rose growers. Seeing that we have now secured both the chrysanthemum and rose societies for 1905, we would be selfish if we begrudged Chicago the carnation convention next year, knowing that it is pretty sure to come our way in 1906. The committee of arrangements voted to dispense with music at our late spring show. An increased attendance over 1903 showed that flowers were more of a drawing card than music.

Popular Easter plants promise to be lilies, Crimson Ramblers, azaleas, acacias, ericas, Spiraea compacta and S. astilboides, hydrangeas, bulbous stock in pans and yellow marguerites.

Poinsettias are not usually counted upon as Easter flowers. Houghton & Clark displayed a large vase of these the past week, which were well preserved.

At a charity fair held on March 25, at the Hotel Vendome, some fancy prices were realized for cut flowers. Orchids sold well. Odontoglossums in boxes of eight to ten spikes sold at $40, cattleyas for $25, boxes of coelogyne for $10. Orchids are not yet back numbers in the Hub.

Those who want a brilliant scarlet for Easter cutting should try Anemone fulgens. It is easily grown and sells on sight.

Visitors in town from a distance include H. Hurrell, Summit, N. J.; J. R. Fotheringham and F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; Julius Roehrs and Thomas Knight, Rutherford, N. J.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week found everything in the cut flower line very quiet and there was more fine stock than the demand had any use for; it was a pity to see a lot of extra fine, long Beauties going to waste in the wholesale market. The same may be said of bulbous stock, including Harrisii and callas. Prices are rather high for the amount of stock that is coming in, but the wholesalers will not come down on the price, except on large lots. Of course this (Easter) week prices will go up somewhat on choice stock, but not much if the cut stock comes in as it has been doing.

During the past week extra select Beauties sold as low as $3 per dozen and fine stock was offered at $2 per dozen. Brides and Maids have also been rather plentiful and cheap for the quality. Meteor, Liberty and Perle sold slowly. The supply of carnations was heavy. Fancy, unless extra fine, sold at $3 and good common stock at $1 to $1.50 per 100. The cut at present is very heavy and there was a great accumulation of surplus stock. There will be no shortage in bulb stock this week, as the market shows plenty of everything in this line.

There is a good deal of speculation as to the Easter supply for the end of this week. Those who have canvassed the vicinity say there will be plenty of Harrisii for the local demand in both cut flowers and plants. A big lot of violets went to waste last week and sales on them were very slow at 25 and 35 cents per 100. Sweet peas too are over-plentiful; white are selling fairly well, hardly any sales for pink. Smilax is still selling well, with not enough for the demand. Common ferns are selling at 35 cents per 100, other greens as usual.

Various Notes.

Arnold Ringier, of W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, passed through here from California going east.

S. S. Skidelsky, the man who sells everything in the florists' line, spent several days here last week. Charlie Ford is also making the rounds of the trade.

A. C. Canfield, of Springfield, Ill., made friendly calls the past week among the trade.

L. Coatsworth and friends, of Chicago, spent Saturday with us, calling on the trade and visiting the World's Fair grounds.

B. H. Walker was in town selling the McCray Florist Refrigerators. Mr. Walker reports trade good in his line.

Henry Berning is the latest victim of the grippe. Mrs. Berning is also sick at their home. During their absence Julius Koenig and Otto are running the place.

President D. R. Francis, of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, claims that when the company took Forest Park it was with the understanding not to return it as they found it, but to improve it after the Fair. But the Board of Public Improvements, which met last week, says they must give a $550,000 bond to restore it as they found it, and that should settle the question.

Theo. Miller, on Delmar avenue, is showing some extra fine blooming plants for his Easter trade.

Fred Weber and John Stiedle returned from West Baden, Ind., last Wednesday, looking very much better in health.

C. Young & Sons Co. are making a grand display of blooming plants this week, their Harrisii being exceptionally fine.

The Riessen Floral Co. reports large church decorations for this week and plenty of orders ahead for Easter.

Kalisch & Sons, at Taylor and Delmar avenues, are showing a lot of Easter plants hard to beat. The boys report trade good.

Fred Weber's show house is a sight to behold this week; the finest of everything in Easter stock at this place.

F. H. Weber, on Maryland and Boyle avenues, is also in line with some well-grown Easter stock and a fine show of cut flowers.

At the next meeting of the Florists' Club, on April 14, at 2 o'clock, every member attending will be presented with a fine souvenir. A large attendance is expected. Essays by George Windler and John Stiedle will be very interesting. Chairmen of all committees are requested to report at the hall at 1:30 to meet the vice-president and superintendent of trade display of the S. A. F., to review the report of the executive committee and receive instructions as to their duty from then on.

Bowling.

On Friday last the Florists' bowling team suffered defeat at the hands of the Rosedales on the Palace alleys. The florists won the first game, making 900 pins to the Rosedales' 763, but bad breaks in the last two games lost the match for the florists. A number of other matches will be rolled after Easter with strong local ten-pin clubs about the city.

The two teams of the Florists' Club rolled a match game on Monday night with the following results:

INDIANAPOLIS.

On March 25 this city was visited by the worst flood in its history. For thirty hours it rained incessantly, causing all the creeks and the river to leave their banks and cover all the low-lying land. Nearly all the florists' places are on high ground, however, and all escaped injury except J. Buheit and Dow at Broadripple. Both had their boiler cellars filled and were unable to fire for several days. Buheit reports $50 damage on flowers and plants that were stored away for Easter. The mercury dropped to 22 degrees on Monday morning, but both kept the frost out with stoves, lamps, etc. The city water was cut off until Tuesday and some had a tough time getting water into the boilers. At this writing everybody is running in good shape again, and busy getting ready for a big Easter trade.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

This week did not start off as well as had been hoped. Supplies of stock were larger than had been expected and showed a considerable increase over last week, which was something of a surprise, for it was thought that the growers would be holding back large quantities for the Easter rush. As a matter of fact the low quality of much of the stock received Monday and Tuesday would indicate that considerable sorting and storing was in progress. If the producers were able to work off their low grades early in the week and have the good stock for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, they will be fortunate, for there will be none too much first class material, judging from the number of orders on file.

But the result of so much material coming on in the last few days, much of it poor, has been that, with a fair demand, good stock has been at a premium, with the bulk of the receipts standing around and selling cheaply. There is no possibility of enough Beauties for the week's business, the only thing to prevent a considerable advance over quoted prices being the reluctance of the buyers to pay fancy figures at Easter. Liberty and Meteor orders, too, will go out short, but there will probably be enough Brides and Maids to go around where the shipper is given some latitude as to quality. There will not be cream for all. There are likely to be all the common carnations the buyers want, with good prospects for a shortage of the 5-cent grade, for orders are very heavy.

There need be no alarm about not having enough lilies but the discussion will come on the question of quality. There are a great many that are small and short, so that there is likely to be a wide range of prices and somebody is pretty sure to feel that he has got the worst of it. Bulbous stock was still a glut at the beginning of the week and violets were very poor property. It will remain for Saturday to show whether there is life enough left in them for a spurt at the finish; otherwise it will have been a mighty poor season for the violet growers.

Stock has not been carrying well in this damp weather and the floods have delayed some shipments. It is to be hoped the elements will be kind for the next few days.

Various Notes.

Leonard Kill has been devoting his spare time to electioneering for his brother-in-law in the twenty-sixth ward. The boys in the market relate that he spent, the other evening, about four hours and $17, more or less, in the effort to convert two gentlemen he met in a quiet place out near the greenhouses; they were much interested but shook their heads sadly and regretted that they "could not vote for Mr. Reinberg." After the forty-seventh round, or was it only the forty-third, on being pressed for a reason why they could not vote for the carnation candidate, one of them confided: "Well, we must be going. You see, we live in Kansas City." The election is next Tuesday and every florist who lives in the ward will vote early

There was a meeting of the Horticultural Society of Chicago at P. J. Hauswirth's on Tuesday afternoon. The fall show was the principal topic for discussion and it was finally decided to leave the whole matter to the executive committee. If the committee can find a suitable hall there will doubtless be a good show, otherwise none at all.

Joe Curran has bought the Michigan avenue store of Johnson & Swan, taking possession March 28. Mr. Johnson states that an agreement has been made whereby he will buy out John Mangel shortly after Easter. Mr. Mangel has not enjoyed his usual good health for several months and is thinking of spending the summer in Greece.

Fire attacked the block at the corner of Wabash and Adams street Tuesday and the department flooded out the New York Floral store in the basement. This is the headquarters of an aggregation of shrewd merchants who are said to do a large business in buying up surplus lots around the market, shipping the stock to their confreres in several smaller cities.

E. E. Pieser says that he expects the Easter trade to foot up ahead of any previous year, with a lively scramble for good roses and carnations before the week is over. He calls attention to the fact that all orders are for a greater proportion of carnations than ever.

The big wind at Morgan Park last week blew down Singler Bros.' tall chimney and broke quite a little glass. It also took off John Turner's windmill, breaking some glass. Out at Evanston, the floods got into some of the boiler rooms, making much trouble.

Clifford Pruner, who has been at his home in Ohio since the holidays, is in town for a few days. He has nearly recovered his health.

The express companies have declined to give the wholesalers a wagon after six o'clock this week and late orders will have to be hustled to the trains the best way they can.

The tailor over John Mangel recently moved out and Mr. Mangel has the store for a plant annex this week.

The George Wittbold Co. now has a down-town retail stand in Kaempfer's, 88 State street. They have a fine house of lilies for this week.

James Paulsen will shortly turn his place over to his grower and remove to Virginia to make his home for a time.

Carl Niemann, president of the Gardeners' Union, will shortly leave the West Parks to go into business for himself at Norwood Park, where the family owns some real estate and where a beginning will be made at carnation growing by building two 125-foot houses this spring.

Mrs. Annie Kreitling Kochman has taken the business of Walter Kreitling & Co. and will continue it. She has been in the store right along and is well qualified to make the business a success.

There is considerable complaint among growers that the longiflorums are short and poorly flowered. Sam Pearce says that the late, well ripened bulbs are the best but that the essential is to let the plants make a good root growth before any attempt is made to force them.

Albert F. Amling is planning another addition to his range this spring, short-span houses set on Garland iron gutters.

Frank Garland expects to cut 10,000 lilies this week.

Wieter Bros. are getting in fine, long-stemmed sweet peas, selling readily at $1.50 per hundred.

Mrs. Horton, of Bassett & Washburn's, lost her mother last week, her illness having been prolonged. Mrs. Horton has many friends in the trade and they all sympathize deeply with her in her grief.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is doing quite a business in dormant rose plants.

Carl Thomas says the A. L. Randall Co. will get in 100,000 carnations within four days this week.

C. W. McKellar is handling the Easter chickens and finds the moderate priced ones ready sale, but hardly anybody wants to pay over $4 a dozen.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There is marked activity in the cut flower centers, with carnations advancing in price and a considerable scarcity of greens, especially smilax, as features. The probability of a shortage in good lilies is generally admitted. Still it is improbable that prices will stiffen much on this staple Easter flower. Choice carnations are promised in quantity, with prospects of a brisk demand. The outlook for roses is fair, but hardly as bright as for lilies and carnations. Smilax is eagerly sought, very ordinary stuff bringing fancy prices. The condition of the violet and daffodil supply is a little uncertain. Neither are coming in freely, but there is a growing suspicion that they may sweep down in torrents before the week is out.

Easter Plants.

Reports gathered from various sources agree that a very large business has been done in blooming plants during the past fortnight. It is stated that most of the wholesale growers were unable to accept orders early this week, some varieties of stock being very difficult to obtain. It can be safely said that this Easter is a good one from the growers' standpoint in so far as the selling of the finished stock is concerned. Of course the expense of production has been high and in many cases too large a percentage of plants have not been ready in time.

The Show.—Continued.

The groups of Cineraria stellata were features in the main hall at the exhibition last week. The improvement in the culture of these plants during the last few years has been very marked. The central group arranged around a half dozen columns by the Wm. Graham Co. was much admired. In azaleas there were some handsome specimens in large tubs, evenly flowered and prettily contrasted in color. In genistas there were four fine specimens that attracted attention. In spiraeas, the variety Gladstone was covered with large blooms. Nearby was the pink variety, Palmetto, seen in two shades of that color. Wm. Robertson showed some very fine Cineraria hybrida. Two groups of well-grown geraniums in half a dozen distinct varieties were shown, besides many other choice plants.

The H. A. Dreer Co. showed a plant of their pretty Asparagus myriocladus. In bulbs there was a large assortment of well grown hyacinths, narcissi and tulips in pans and in pots. One of the latter, Raphael, is a double variety of a very pretty shade of pink somewhat resembling Murillo. James Bell exhibited Chrysanthemum segetum bearing many large flowers. Albert Woltemate showed a prettily trained plant of cape jasmine covered with blossoms. Wm. Wunder, of Pittville, Pa., brought a bunch of a pale pink sport from Bridesmaid, very distinct. The Henry F. Michell Co. made a fine exhibit of their stock on the lower floor.

The Rose Society.

The features of the rose society's annual meeting were the paper and discussion on grafting, which was very instructive, and Dr. Huey's paper with colored illustrations of outdoor varieties. Boston was chosen as the place for next year's meeting and Alexander Montgomery, of Natick, Mass., as the new president. The other officers chosen were: Vice-president, F. R. Newbold, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; treasurer, J. N. May, Summit, N. J., and secretary, Leonard Barron, New York City. A number of special prizes were promised for next season's show.

The Rose Banquet.

Fully seventy-five rose growers, wholesalers, florists, seedsmen and visitors gathered at the invitation of the Florists' Club to do honor to the American Rose Society. For a full account of who were there and what things, both witty and wise, were said I must refer you to another column.

Various Items.

Leo Niessen reports an excellent demand for wild smilax.

William P. Craig opened a florists' shop at Tenth and Chestnut streets last Monday, just for Easter. He has been doing a plant commission business in the past few weeks.

Chas. F. Edgar & Co. have had gratifying returns from their first Easter price list.

A prominent bulb grower was in this city recently, trying to locate a grower whom he had been assured wanted 50,000 Von Sion narcissi. He left bound for New York and Boston to continue his quest.

Miss Eisele, daughter of J. D. Eisele, vice-president of the H. A. Dreer Co., has happily recovered from a severe illness.

Berger Brothers have an attractive horse and delivery wagon on the street. John Berger made a flying visit to New York this week.

The price of hardy ferns has advanced from $2 to $2.50 per 1,000.

Floral Life recently published a very prettily written account of the violet plant of Francis Bloomer, by Miss Beatrice Clayton. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The weather turned unseasonable towards the end of the week and the market has showed no improvement whatever in values up to this writing, in fact, only accentuated the fact that the week before Easter is always one of the dull-est of the year. The finest Beauties often failed to go above 15 cents and 8 cents was high water mark for Brides and Maids. Special violets were glad to touch 35 cents a 100. Bulbous stock is still overwhelming in quantity and shipments of narcissi from the south add to the depression. Some rumors of a let-up in shipments were heard and the old fear of pickled stock is again in evidence. It seems some growers never will learn the lesson. If the practice is continued, then it will be a plant Easter again more pronounced than ever. But if stock is shipped regularly and the demand is not "starved" during the early days of the week, the demand for cut flowers of good quality at reasonable prices will find the market completely depleted on Saturday. The retailers will again do their share in replacing the cut flower department of the Easter trade where it belongs.

Death of G. E. Fancourt.

The sad news of the death of Geo. E. Fancourt, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., reached New York on Monday evening, and was a great shock to his many friends in this city. He had made every preparation for his trip to Spokane, Wash., and his sudden taking away is much deplored. A widow and four children are left to mourn his untimely death.

Various Notes.

The retail stores everywhere in the city were made very attractive for Palm Sunday, the plant decorations in many of the shops being elaborate. It remains for Thursday of this week to demonstrate what the plantsmen around New York have accomplished. There will be no scarcity of anything. Novelties are in evidence, in boxes, vases and unique designs in decorative material. No wonder it takes an extraordinary flower show to draw the New Yorkers in the fall when they can "without money or without price" see this week the greatest of flower shows.

Elliott will have his regular auction on Good Friday, selling blooming plants for Easter. Importations of rhododendrons, roses and evergreens, are large and the interest in his semi-weekly sales is growing and the attendance increasing. Cleary's horticultural hall, 62 Vesey street, is also bidding for a share of the auction patronage.

Lansing, Mich., rejoices in the liberality of the Lord & Burnham Co., whose donation to the horticultural department of the college there of a model greenhouse, is heartily appreciated.

The lily shipments from Bermuda are here on time, to cheapen the legitimate stock. Poor enough stuff most of this is, but its influence is a menace to the regular grower whose crop in many places is still, with the dull weather prevailing, a most uncertain quantity.

A new wholesale cut flower house is making a bid for a share of Brooklyn's patronage. Beake & Crist is the title of the firm, and headquarters are at 26 Boerum place.

J. O. Hanft, of Hanft Bros., returns this week from the south after a long stay, fully recovered. This firm had the big Rice wedding at Delmonico's last week, in which lilies and daisies comprised the decoration. A large funeral order Saturday included a pall containing 15,000 violets.

Warendorff had a window crowded last week with his dollar boxes of roses and tulips, a scheme that seemed to make rapid inroads on the surplus.

At the next meeting of the Florists' Club, April 11, one of the representatives of the horticultural press will read a paper on "The Easter Business in New York," and at the May meeting William Elliott will make an address on the "Idiosyncrasies of the Auction Business," a subject many years of experience enables him to treat from every standpoint. He will especially elaborate the humorous side of the question.

LIBERTIES

One of our largest and best growers was just a week late for Easter with a splendid crop of Liberties. We can supply large quantities of fine, long stock for the next two or three weeks. Plenty for all. Send in your orders.

The department stores announce the opening of their sales of hardy roses, shrubs, seeds, bulbs, etc., this week and the descriptions given of the various varieties are more than amusing. But the amount of stock sold by these big houses in this way is enormous.

The New York Market Florists' Association has taken a lease on the grounds of the old market at Canal and West streets, and will erect tents for the accommodation of its members.

The handsome manager of the Cut Flower Co., Joseph Millang, was erroneously styled the "lily king" in last week's issue; the "Beauty king" is his acknowledged title.

The engagement is announced of S. E. Bennett, of Rockville Center, and Miss Winnifred Gifford, of Toledo, O. The wedding will take place in October.

Robert McLeod, gardener for R. C. Vanderbilt at Newport, was killed in a runaway accident March 23.

Bowling.

The prize bowling contest Monday evening did not attract as large a proportion of the membership as was expected. Eight of the faithful were on hand and the evening was hugely enjoyed. There were several interesting diversions. The prizes were won by the following scores and the selections were made from the packages without a knowledge of their contents:

Lang184	Prize $2 cash.
O'Mara152	Handsome calendar.
Gibbs133	Silk scarf.
Frank117	Pearl handled umbrella.
Shaw101	Gold scarfpin with pearl.
Nugent95	Silk suspenders.
Elliott85	Bisque match safe.

All prizes were announced to be in value $1 and over, and several were more than double. The score indicates the nervous intensity of the struggle for first honors. The other games of the evening follow:

AN AMERICAN PEONY GROWER.

H. A. Terry and James Kelway have for more than thirty years been engaged in improving the peony and each has given to the world some fine new kinds which have added much to our collections of choice flowers. I have about eighty kinds from each and for years have had a chance to compare them. At first, as I had to pay about four times as much for the foreign sorts, I thought they must be much better than the "home made" varieties. But I find that Mr. Terry's average up very well with Kelway's. Many of them are of exquisite and delicate beauty.

His Pallas is a marvel among peonies, a two-storied affair. Among the whites it is hard to beat the delicate Clara Barton, with its transparent, tissue-like petals, or his La Reine. Crimson Queen is very fine and his Grover Cleveland a wonder, crimson petals packed together in a solid ball, the most compact of the whole family. If you want a dainty, fragrant little thing take his Morning Star.

Why has one grower a world wide renown while the other is known only locally? The difference is in the use of printers' ink. Mr. Terry's list, in its descriptions, is only a bare statement of fact and reads like the demonstration of a problem; Kelway sets off his beauties in glowing terms. I do not think Mr. Terry ever had a photograph taken of any of his marvelous flowers. I often visit this grand old man, for he is now about 78 years old, and when the horticulturists begin to perpetuate memories by erecting monuments to our great workers, if such reminders are necessary, I believe one of the tallest shafts should be erected to H. A. Terry, of Crescent, Iowa.

Kindly discontinue our Carlson's aster seed advertisement. Although we have had this in your paper only one week, our stock is exhausted owing to the exceedingly heavy orders received since our advertisement appeared. We do not know whether this is due to the fact that your paper goes in the hands of so many live florists or because the florists in general recognize the superior quality of this seed.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., O. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THE accumulated orders for seed potatoes will be hustled forward now if weather permits.

R. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford, Ill., reports a very satisfactory trade, not quite up to the business of two years ago, but well in advance of last year to same date.

FOR those who complain of the indefinite nature of onion seed reports, here is something comprehensive:

"The Bullfrog raised its tail on high
And madly rushed across the plain;
The Lightning Bug went thundering by
And then we had a fearful rain."

A COMMON carrier cannot limit its liability for goods lost in shipment, through its negligence, by any regulation or any provision printed on the back or stamped across the face of the bill of lading, unless the same is agreed upon with the shipper or distinctly brought to his attention.—Doyle v. B. & O. R. Co. Circuit Court Western District of Pennsylvania.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Half the asparagus crop of the state was destroyed by the recent floods in the Sacramento valley. The growers have seen their asparagus beds utterly destroyed and now face ruin. The price of asparagus will be high this year. The canneries of the state will have no crop with which to work and as a result many people will be denied employment by the closing of the industry.

TESTS of eight lots of seed corn recently were made by the Ohio Experiment Station. The corn had been carried through the winter in different ways: In a large crib six feet wide; overhead in crib spread out in a thin layer on the floor; and in a room where the temperature was from 60 to 72 degrees. Of the crib corn (selected ears) only sixty kernels out of 100 germinated; of similar corn kept overhead in crib eighty-one kernels germinated; of that subjected to artificial heat ninety-five out of 100 germinated.

REPORTS in general indicate that the business of the month has been quite satisfactory. The jobbers are not complaining; popular staples while they lasted went out at very good prices, and when sold out made a fair market for less popular sorts. Onion sets are well cleaned up and no fall in price is looked for. Mail trade, owing to weather conditions, is below the average in most cases. Counter trade, where the principal customer is the market gardener, shows up in good shape, but at the counters where the amateur is mostly looked for the showing has been poor.

A Paying Crop

Can be secured by sowing our ASPARAGUS SEED now. It is remarkable seed, so full of life that nearly every seed germinates under ordinary conditions. We have made a number of tests and we know that this is true.

ASPARAGUS PLUMOSUS NANUS seed, greenhouse grown, will germinate nearly 100 per cent. New seeds, $1.00 per 100; $7.50 per 1,000.

ASPARAGUS SPRENGERI, new crop seed, 15c per 100; $1.00 per 1,000. Special prices on large lots. Send for Catalogue.

THE following clipping may partly explain why retail and small mail trade is so unsatisfactory. It is from the Chicago Examiner, March 26:

The map showed freezing weather as far south as Oklahoma—28 at Oklahoma and through Kansas from 18 to 24 above. No moisture in Kansas or Oklahoma; excessive rains in Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Texas. There is a rainfall of 4.70 at Indianapolis and of over 2 inches at Cincinnati and Fort Worth and St. Louis. Freezing all over Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma this morning.

THE ONION SET DISEASE.

John W. Lloyd, professor of olericulture at the University of Illinois, College of Agriculture, writes as follows to a Chicago onion set grower:

Referring to the diseased white onion sets which you sent me October 3, 1903, and concerning which you wrote me a few days later. One of the botanists here has identified the organism which is evidently responsible for the disease, and finds it to be the onion anthracnose (Vermicularia circinans, Berk.). The fungus is present on the onions when they are harvested, but it is likely to do most of its damage by later development during storage. This damage is most severe when the atmosphere of the storage house is too warm and moist. If the sets are perfectly dry when stored, and are kept at a low temperature in a house that can be ventilated in dry weather and kept closed when the outside atmosphere is moist, the disease is less likely to develop badly than if the opposite conditions exist. Also crates or bins which have previously contained diseased sets, should be thoroughly cleaned and sprinkled with lime, or lime and sulphur, before they are used again. Diseased sets should not be stored with sound sets, because the disease can be transmitted by contact, or by the spores being carried by draughts of air.

It has been suggested that sprinkling the bulbs with air-slaked lime at the time of storing would probably prevent the further development of the disease, though I can find no record of this treatment having been tried, and do not know as it would be practicable commercially.

It is also probable that rotation of the crop would be a good thing, since it is likely that the organism may live over winter in the soil or on refuse of the crop.

Burpee's Seeds Grow

CUCUMBERS.

We have just made our last sowing of cucumbers for this season. Houses that were too cold through the winter months can now be utilized for this crop, as less fire heat will be necessary to maintain the necessary temperature, which should not be less than 65 degrees by night and 80 to 85 by day during bright weather. More advanced plants require frequent and careful syringing and the house should be damped down several times a day to maintain a moist atmosphere, which is necessary to keep red spider and thrips in check.

The keeping of cucumbers clean is one of the most important points in their cultivation. When this can be done half the battle is won. Another important point is careful ventilation. Although they delight in a moist atmosphere, and such an atmosphere is essential to their well-being, at the same time enough air must be admitted to keep the foliage as firm as possible. Unless air is admitted on all favorable occasions soft growth will result and the sun's rays will have a flagging influence on the plants, even if they have the protection of shade. Slight shade will be beneficial from now on in preventing flagging and scorching of the foliage but care must be taken not to overdo it.

Though with bright weather and the freer circulation of air many of the fruits may set naturally now, still it is safer to keep on pollinating by hand, as it insures a better crop. To plants in bearing the frequent application of liquid manure will be of much benefit, both in extending their time of bearing and enlarging the size of the product.

W. S. CROYDON.

PARSLEY.

The old plants from which the crop has been gathered all winter will now begin to be less productive and will show signs of running to seed; therefore a supply of young plants ought to be about large enough to take their place. We contrive to have a succession of younger plants large enough to keep up the supply when the old plants begin to weaken. We don't plant parsley in the house after this date, as we find that the space can be more profitably utilized for other things, and the crop will grow nearly as fast in frames from now on and be less troubled with aphids, which after the weather becomes warm is quite a troublesome pest in the greenhouse. We usually manage to keep them in check with the free use of tobacco stems in the house, though a smoking is sometimes necessary. This we apply whenever the pest appears.

W. S. CROYDON.

FINDLAY, O.—S. J. McMichael says it has been a hard winter, but he thinks prospects very good for spring. His specialty is vegetable plants. He bedded forty bushels of sweet potatoes for plants and expects to be ready to ship toward the end of April. Last fall he saved his own tomato seed from selected plants, so that he knows just what he has to offer his patrons this season. Just now he is very busy, making beds and getting ready to transplant tomatoes, cauliflower and cabbage.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

M. S. STONE, of San Jose, Cal., is dead. He was 39 years of age and did a large nursery business.

THE many small parks to be added to the South Parks system in Chicago has brought the park board into the market for large quantities of nursery stock, particularly in the larger sizes.

THE high-bush cranberry, Viburnum opulus, is an attractive bush at flowering time, in May, but it is for the autumn, when it is full of large, bright red berries, that it is most planted.

THE business of the Muskogee Nursery Co., Muskogee, I. T., has increased to the point where Mr. Kinsley, its head, says additional capital is required and some treasury stock will be sold to local parties.

E. W. KIRKPATRICK, of McKinney, president of the Texas Nurserymen's Association, says that much of the prosperity of the state is due to the efforts of the railroads to develop its agricultural resources.

RETAIL NURSERYMEN ORGANIZE.

The nurserymen of western New York met March 19 at Rochester, and after dinner, organized the National Association of Retail Nurserymen. The plan for this organization was decided upon at a meeting held March 10. It is the first national retail association of nurserymen to be organized in the country. While it has been organized in Rochester, it will, of course, admit to its membership retail nurserymen throughout the United States.

The following firms were represented: Allen Nursery, H. J. Bowden, Brown Bros., E. J. Bowden, G. Costich & Co., Chase Bros., Charlton Nursery Co., Charles H. Chase, Ellwanger & Barry, Glen Bros., F. E. Grover & Co., Graham Nursery, Hooker, Wyman & Co., Hawkes Nursery, R. D. Luetchford & Co., George Moulson & Son, Oliver Brothers' Co., Rochester Nursery Co., H. S. Taylor & Co., Western New York Nursery, Irving Rouse, C. L. Yates, Pinnacle Nursery Co., all of Rochester; Clark Nursery, Pierson Bros.' Co., Waterloo; C. W. Stuart & Co., Newark; R. G. Chase & Co., Geneva.

A constitution was adopted, and officers and an executive committee were elected. The officers are: President, William Pitkin, of Rochester; vice-president, O. C. Chase, of Geneva; secretary-treasurer, John B. Killy, of Rochester. The executive committee is C. H. Stuart, of Newark; E. S. Osborne and Walter W. Wyman, of Rochester.

The objects of the association are to promote cordial business relations among its members, to advance their interests and prosperity, and to deal with any important matter that may arise in connection with the nursery business. It is expected that the association will have a beneficial influence on the nursery trade.

The bulbs of Narcissus Paper White grandiflora and N. princeps exhibited by the Misses Wilson, of Montgomery, Ala., at Milwaukee last August for test as to forcing qualities, have been bloomed by Carl Jurgens, of Newport, R. I., who reports that the Paper Whites which flowered were very fine and fully equal to imported stock. There were, however, a good many "sets" in the collection, the bulbs evidently having been grown in a clump and taken up as such and separated. Mr. Jurgens expresses the belief that had these sets been planted out, as is done in general bulb culture, and grown for one season, they would have made most excellent bulbs, like those that flowered.

As to the N. princeps, results were not so satisfactory, although they were not forced till late and, in Mr. Jurgens' opinion, the climate of Montgomery is too warm for the growing of bulbs of this class. WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

Is a book of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review), and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopedia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

STANDARD ROSES.

The growing of standard or tree roses is a subject that most of the florists and nurserymen have had little experience in. The selection of the wild stock that will be of long life is the most important item. Practical growers have long since discarded most of the European and eastern wild varieties and confined themselves to sorts that have proven hardy enough to withstand our dry summers without scalding and bark binding, rooting deeply enough to furnish a plentiful flow of sap to delicate growing heads. Rosa canina, a great quantity of which is used in Europe, is almost worthless here, as at the best it does not last over one season. The absence of moisture in the summer seems to be fatal to it and, together with several other wild briars, we have ceased to use it.

Manetti stock is used for many varieties of hybrid perpetual roses and for some hybrid teas. We used Baltimore

Belle for a few years, but on account of its liability to suckering it is not of much value. The native Castilian is very long-lived and does not sucker badly, but it is of slow growth and makes a very small stem and does not grow in proportion to the top. I have seen stock of this variety thirty years budded that was not over three-fourths of an inch in diameter and the top three or four feet across. The Banksias, especially the white variety, are splendid to grow. Noisette varieties on, but they are not used much.

La Grifferae seems to be about the best all around stock we have used up to date and I think it fills most of the requirements. It is of strong growth, makes a heavy stem, a good feeder and does not root sucker. The varieties budded in it do not grow out as soon as they do on some other stocks, but it forces them along well and they make good, strong heads in a reasonable time. When plenty of moisture is given it during the growing season it attains a very large size and makes tremendous roots.

But one thing in particular should be remembered in growing standard or tree roses, and that is that they should not be grown too fast by the application of much water, as they are then very difficult to transplant without resorting to heavy pruning. Tree roses that are grown without much irrigation are much easier to handle, even if they are not so big either in stem or head, and the public will have much more satisfaction after they are planted. G.

CAMELLIAS.

A correspondent from California asks why camellias have dropped so many flower buds this season. I have noticed the same trouble, both with large specimen plants that I have had planted many years in the ground and also with smaller stock kept in pots. The trouble I find with camellias is that they must be kept constantly moist at the roots.

Our camellias are commencing to make new growth now and in a few months this new wood will have attained its proper length and flower buds will form. These grow slowly and this is when our dry season commences. The camellia is a shrub that requires plenty of moisture to thrive well and when this is denied it at the season when everything here has to be watered artificially, the buds will hang on to the stems, but are blighted, and although the plant is apparently full of plump flower buds, it only wants our blustering wintry weather to cause most of them to partially open and then drop off and leave only a few that succeeded in getting moisture enough to develop. I have found that even our severest frost does not spoil the unopened buds; it blights and discolors the blooms and retards their opening, but does not injure the plant.

Camellias like a moist atmosphere and are not especially fond of shady situations, although in partial shade they do well. But to get the full value of the plant place it in the open ground, give it good drainage and do not be afraid of giving it too much water. Some varieties are very heavy bearers and I have found it a good plan to disbud about half the quantity formed. In shady situations the camellia does not flower as freely as in the open ground and as a pot plant, especially when the roots are cramped, it blossoms wonderfully, but I have seen plants that were growing outside with fifty to seventy-five buds and open flowers, drop them all when brought into a warm room. This is from the change of dry for moist atmosphere, something the camellia will not tolerate. For the same reason we do not grow it as a greenhouse pot plant, but keep it in general in a shade house where the temperature is low. G.

NURSERY STOCK.

The demand for home-grown nursery stock in California and throughout the Pacific coast is yet in its infancy. A few years ago, when there were many less large private places than there are

We Speak about Ribbons of merit. The RIGHT RIBBONS specially woven to meet the demands of Florists. These Ribbons are lustrous, firm, heavy to the touch, clean of weave. at present, the call was only for a few varieties of ornamental trees and was easily supplied. But in the last few years we have had a large influx of eastern people who came to this coast to establish homes and they have created a demand for a greater variety than the local nurserymen have been able to supply. This was the commencement of our branching out on more extensive lines and our dealers are beginning to devote themselves more and more each year to the importing and propagating of newer and more desirable classes of stock. Only a few years ago some of our largest nurseries did not pretend to carry over a dozen varieties of evergreen trees and hardy palms. For sidewalk trees we had little to offer except cork bark elms or native palms, and for an ornamental hedge Monterey cypress. The demand has shifted considerably, so that we now are planting some of the light, graceful pittosporums for hedging and for sidewalk purposes umbrella trees in some sections, eastern elms, white maples, European linden, scarlet and white hawthorns, pink and white horse chestnut and many other desirable trees. A good demand has also sprung up for specimen conifers and deciduous shade ornamentals for garden planting, and as this is constantly on the increase those dealers who can read the signs of the times will be amply repaid for their trouble in good orders at remunerative prices.

In roses California has had abundant stock on hand for the past few years to supply the coast, save possibly for small greenhouse-grown plants on their own roots that are used for forcing. Of these we import a good many thousands yearly from our eastern growers. Carnations likewise we grow in vast quantities and probably export as many as we receive.

Birches of various kinds, oaks and hundreds of desirable and valuable ornamental trees are being sought after by planters, and it is high time our dealers made preparations to supply the demand that is sure to come. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are in the eighth week of rainy weather and the end appears to be not yet. We are within ten days of Easter and the inquiries for decorations and stock for that occasion are not very heavy at this writing, but as Californians generally put off such small matters until the latest possible moment we may have a much different story to tell within another week. Flowers are not over plentiful, nor have they been for the past month, but the florists have not had any trouble to supply their wants, as the demand has been very light. There have been, however, quite a lot of funeral orders during this week. Violets have been the grand exception to the rule. They have been brought in by millions and we can now expect them to be scarcer and of poorer quality. It appears that there is hardly anyone growing doubles. Some years ago we had quantities of Swanley White and Marie Louise, but owing to the greater popularity of the Princess of Wales the double sorts were gradually allowed to fall behind. Roses are of fair quality and of fair quantity and sell at about the same prices they have brought for the past month. Carnations can be had at from 25 to 50 cents per dozen, with only a few choice varieties at the long end.

From Ingleside, Elmhurst, Berkeley and Burlingame quantities of Easter lilies will be forwarded to town and there will be no shortage, judging by appearances now. They are selling wholesale at $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen. Pot grown plants are offered at from $6 to $9 per dozen and there will be plenty to supply all demands. Good azaleas will not be as plentiful as usual, as most of our growers report their plants past their prime. White wistarias in bloom make something attractive and quite out of the ordinary, and are being used extensively this season. They are grown in 6 and 7-inch pots and forced into bloom in the greenhouses. Valley is plentiful but daffodils, except some small flowering late varieties, are about over. Narcissi have disappeared, excepting poeticus, which are in full bloom now.

Various Notes.

Geo. Karmann, of whose illness I spoke last week, passed away at Elmhurst and was buried on Sunday. Mr. Karmann was well known to all the growers in this section and had a large area of glass. He was 44 years of age and leaves a widow and four children to mourn his loss.

SINGLE STEMMED MUMS.

Will you kindly inform us as to the best time to take cuttings for single-stemmed chrysanthemums? G. B.

For bench culture, cuttings may be taken at any time from now on for single stems, providing one has seven or eight feet of head room from the top of the bench. Cuttings rooted in March need to be planted out in May and while these early plants give the finest flowers many florists cannot afford to plant their mums until the bedding stock is cleaned out in June. If G. B. has the single-stemmed pot plant in his mind, which is what we in the east always mean when we speak of single stems, these are rooted in late May and early June. They are potted up from the sand into 2½-inch pots and from that to 6-inch, in which pot they are flowered. Properly grown the 6-inch single-stemmed plant is a handsome subject, if suitable dwarf kinds are grown and I have no doubt G. B. can find ready sale for such in his vicinity, though they seem to have gone out of fashion in the effete east. BRIAN BORU.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

This city has been under water, in common with a good share of southern Michigan and northern Indiana, the past week. One of the heaviest losers will be G. VanBochove & Bro. "We have been able to keep up steam through pipes from the mill across the street," said Mr. VanBochove this morning. "Our loss is at present impossible to estimate, but will run into the thousands. Fortunately we saved all our Easter stuff, and much of the other stock in the greenhouses will be saved. In others where the water covered the steam pipes, we were unable to keep the plants warm."

The Calder greenhouses on East Main street, just east of the river, also suffered serious loss.

WATERVILLE, ME.—The past winter has been a hard one for florists in Maine. The mercury was below zero most of the time from Christmas until March, and plant trade was very light on that account. H. R. Mitchell & Son say cut flower trade has averaged better than ever and until spring stock came in they were able to get better prices than usual. Potted bulb stock has moved pretty well.

Indianapolis!

Was there at the finish

When most of the other varieties were rapidly going to sleep, Indianapolis held up in splendid shape. There are two reasons for this. Indianapolis is a splendid keeper and we have not overfed nor overforced our stock. Our vase of 200 blooms was not entered for competition, that's why you did not see it mentioned among the prize winners, but it made a host of friends. We still have about 10,000 for March delivery. Fine healthy cuttings that will make fine stock for next winter's flowering. Will make you more money than any other pink carnation. Order at once. $2.50 per doz., $12.00 per 100, $100 per 1000.

TORONTO.

The Market.

With the promise of nice weather, which started with the end of last week, our Toronto florists were beginning to look pleasant after the hard winter, but at the time of writing the temperature has dropped to about 15 degrees of frost, with an occasional snow flurry. This does not make things so promising for the handling of plants. The general outlook is that there will be plenty of Easter lilies to go around, although the orders are rushing in fast, as we find many of the out-of-town growers did not get their supply in. Roses and carnations will be scarce, while the quality promises to be good. Bulbous stock will be plentiful.

Notes.

Chas. Tidy, of S. Tidy & Son, visited New York and other points last week and brought back some novelties in the plant line. Mr. Tidy has a class of trade that is willing to pay for novelties, but unfortunately the demand is not great enough to warrant our Canadian growers going into that kind of stuff extensively.

We had a call during the week from W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo D. J.

RIVERTON, N. J.—J. D. Eisele says that the past winter was one of the hardest in his recollection for the plantmen doing a shipping trade; the weather was so severe that packing was very difficult. Since moderate temperatures have come business has been good.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—A Mrs. Williams objected to some signs which H. G. Walker put up after he moved his flower store and he had to resort to legal measures to get her to leave the signs where they had every right to be. The result was a suit for $1,000 damages for humiliation, but the court took the matter away from the jury and ordered a verdict in favor of the defendant.

PRESERVATION OF HEN MANURE

It has been a fact of common knowledge for a long time that, as ordinarily stored, hen manure loses a large part of its nitrogen. Little attention has been given to means of preventing these losses. The Maine Agricultural Experiment Station has made a careful study of the effects of chemicals upon the loss of nitrogen, and reached the following conclusions:

By itself, hen manure is a one-sided nitrogenous fertilizer. As usually managed, one-half or more of its nitrogen is lost, so that as ordinarily used it does not carry so great an excess of nitrogen. Because of its excess of nitrogen it will be much more economically used in connection with manures carrying phosphoric acid and potash. As both acid phosphate and kainit prevent the loss of nitrogen, it is possible to use them in connection with saw dust or some other dry material as an absorbent so as to make a well balanced fertilizer. For example, a mixture of thirty pounds of hen manure, ten pounds of saw dust or dry loam, sixteen pounds of acid phosphate, and eight pounds of kainit would carry about 1.25 per cent nitrogen, 4.5 per cent phosphoric acid, and 2 per cent potash, which, used at the rate of two tons per acre, would furnish fifty pounds nitrogen, 185 phosphoric acid and eighty pounds potash.

BLACK FLY ON MUMS.

My whole stock of young chrysanthemums is covered with black fly. I never had this trouble before and would like to know what to do.

F. E.

The black fly is very common on chrysanthemums at all seasons of the year, and I am surprised that the subscriber has not been troubled with it before. Black fly does not seem to do much damage and long familiarity with it renders some growers indifferent to it unless it gets particularly numerous. Tobacco stems spread all around the plants will kill the fly in short order, as will also dusting the plants well with tobacco dust.

NEW ROSES

Cardinal and Enchantress

Read testimonials from two of the largest growers in Washington who have bought a large number of plants after seeing them growing at my place.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1904.

Your new rose Cardinal came duly to hand and we firmly believe it will have a great future, and will certainly be a money maker as it is in a class all to itself, being superior in form and habit to anything that we have as yet seen. Your new rose Enchantress we also think will be a great money maker, judging from its profuse blooming quality, as we have seen it several times in mid-winter. It cannot help being a winner. Wishing you ever success, we remain,

Yours truly,

A. GUDE & BRO.

American Rose Co., 909 F St., N. W., WASHINGTON, March 17, 1904.

DEAR SIR: We gave all the show possible to Enchantress and Cardinal, placing them in our window with placards telling what they were. They kept a week, retaining their brilliant color to the last. Cardinal was as full of perfume the day its petals dropped as when it was first cut. The roses are both matchless, and we believe destined to outclass all roses of their color for forcing under glass.

Very sincerely yours,

Business the last few months has been quiet, in fact more so than for several years. The winter has been very mild, only once getting down to 15 degrees below zero. From Kansas:—"The recent article on propagating hardy roses is worth a year's subscription to the average nurseryman."

AS TO NOVELTIES.

The season is now here when the average, every-day florist must decide on the new varieties he will grow during the coming year and a word to the one who is undecided as to the novelties he will try may not be out of place. To the buyer there is a bewildering list to choose from and I may ask, is the average florist justified in trying a novelty? Usually by the time the weak points of a novelty are found out the disseminator is "all in," and is seeking a new love and, further, the buyer must take into account the growing methods of the originators previous to the staging of the novelties. It would take a poet to describe how the new ones are made ready for their lime light exhibition before the judges who are to score them. You all know the darlings are coddled, fondled, nursed and given attention which the average commercial grower would never think of giving to a standard variety or bread-winner. Do the judges take into account these growing methods? These impracticable methods? I fear not; they do not seem to realize that the novelty is on dress parade and not in every-day attire. One cause for dissatisfaction or disappointment to the buyer is no doubt found in the quality of the propagating material used by the disseminator who in his haste to get returns from what is necessarily a limited stock, does not use that careful selection and restriction which we find the average florist using when selecting material for his own private stock of a standard variety. I do not want to be rated as a backwoodsman; I believe in advancement. I realize that from the novelties of today must come the standard varieties of tomorrow, but to the rank and file of the florists' profession I would ask, has commercialism entered into the introduction of novelties to the trade?

SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Our thriving city was visited by a destructive hail storm in the evening of March 21 and the florists suffered severely. The losses are as follows: In W. A. Chalfant's range of eight houses, 11,500 feet of glass, nearly 4,000 feet were broken. This range was glazed with 16x24 double strength. The Summerfield Floral Co., with 7,800 feet, had 7,200 broken; single strength glass. Chas. Summerfield, vegetable grower, with 14,500 feet, had nearly 13,000 broken; mixed double and single strength. R. Koeppen, with 8,000 feet, had 6,500 feet broken, double and single strength. Ed Quinn, with 8,000 feet, had 7,500 feet broken; single strength. All are insured in the Florists' Hail Association.

In addition to this, rain storms continued and culminated in a drop to 25 degrees on the evening of March 25, with prospects for colder weather. Plants were frozen in the beds and the prospects for Easter trade are almost nothing. Trade has been the best in years and all were looking forward to a heavy spring trade. Several of the firms have begun reglazing and hope soon to be in a normal condition. C.

THE SUPERIOR BOILER.

One day in summer a man who makes an occasional boiler for florists but who doesn't advertise the fact, was seen crawling out from under a boiler at George Reinberg's, Chicago, and, on being questioned, admitted that he had heard that the Superior was a great heater and he wanted "to see how the darned thing was built." While it may be a little bit apart from the ethics of the boiler making profession to go crawling around inside the other fellow's device, still there isn't any secret about the way the Superior is built; it is simplicity itself, as you can see for yourself, without crawling under it. There are a great many in use around Chicago and their fame is steadily widening, until last season sales were made in several states. The manufacturer is the Superior Machine & Boiler Works, and they have this season booked a nice line of business for summer delivery.

THE George M. Garland Co. asks us to supplement our note on the establishment of N. Zweifel, Milwaukee, in the last issue by saying that the houses are on the iron gutter of that firm.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business of late has been very good. Stock of all kinds has been going nicely. Prices have held up well and everything has been very satisfactory. The weather has been fairly warm, but the ground has been so wet the growers have not been able to do any outdoor planting yet. Some bright sunshine is much needed between now and Easter, as stock is backward at many places.

Green goods are awfully scarce. Carnations are doing very nicely and there is a first-class demand for them. Roses are showing evidences of having been pickled and those received from some growers are almost worthless. It is to be hoped that their Easter stock will look fresh, at least. Bulbous stock is selling well and brings better prices. Harrisii lilies are in much better demand.

Various Notes.

The warm spring days we have been having have started outdoor plants into life. Lilacs are coming along rapidly and other shrubs are also pushing forth their green leaves. Last night we had a light snow storm, but it did not do any serious damage except that George & Allan report the loss of about 500 Harrisii which they had stored in a cool shed to hold back. They were badly nipped.

E. G. Gillett went over to New Castle, Ind., last week to have a look at Easter prospects. There will be, he found, a very good cut of roses at most of the places there. Mr. Heller has been on the sick list for a week, and is still confined to his bed, but expects to be out soon.

Wm. H. Gear has also been laid up but is about again now.

Miss White, of Lexington, Ky., was in the city placing orders for Easter stock. She said that business has been very good this season.

C. J. OHMER.

MARINETTE, WIS.—George Vatter has 500 pots of lilies, but not many of them will be in for Easter. However, all the other stock under his 18,000 feet of glass is in good shape. Mr. Vatter expects to make a trip to Europe this summer.

Distance No Bar

We have had several letters from florists in different parts of the country stating that they would like to buy outfits, but consider that they are too far away from Louisville to be able to do so advantageously. This is not the fact. There is no state in this country that has not at least several of our plants. They are so made as to be readily shipped and can be put together by any intelligent workman. A GREAT ACQUISITION. The best of all ferns for cut fronds. Brings the highest prices. The easiest to grow and the easiest to sell. Has received the highest encomiums from the leading cut flower dealers in the country. Buy now. Buy liberally and reap the benefits. Adiantum Croweanum originated at Utica, N. Y., about fourteen years ago, and has been extensively grown by the original owner, Mr. Peter Crowe, who has received phenomenal prices for the cut fronds in the New York and other markets, and has created a great demand for it. The fronds are long, elegantly proportioned and of a texture that renders it the best keeper and shipper of all adiantums. It is a very free and continuous grower, requires no rest, and responds readily to fertilizers. Anyone can grow it and get good money for it. Will be ready to ship July 1, 1904, out of 3-inch pots (strong plants) at the following prices: $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000; 25 at 100 rate, 250 at 1000 rate.

WHAT OTHER PEOPLE SAY ABOUT IT.

WILLIAM SCOTT, Buffalo, N. Y.—“I congratulate you upon securing the entire control of the distribution of the Adiantum Croweanum. On my frequent visits to my friend, Mr. Crowe, I have had an opportunity to observe this beautiful fern from the time when there were but a few hundred plants till last December, when I saw it occupying 20,000 sq. feet of glass. Its freedom of growth, length and beauty of fronds and its wonderful keeping qualities must quickly make it the only commercial Maidenhair Fern. From a very small plant you have in two or three months a splendid crop of fronds. There is no secret in its cultivation, but generous treatment. I feel sure you will find a widespread demand for this beautiful and distinct Adiantum.”

SAMUEL S. PENNOCK, Philadelphia, Pa.—“I consider your Adiantum Croweanum a very valuable acquisition to this line of ferns. It is an excellent commercial variety, good keeper, and has given the best satisfaction wherever we have sold it. Our customers much prefer paying an extra price for it than buying the commoner varieties. The great trouble we find is we cannot get enough to meet our customers' wants.”

JOHN I. RAYNOR, New York City, N. Y.—“During the two years in which I have had the sale of the fronds of Adiantum Croweanum in New York City, the demand has at all times far exceeded the quantity you have been able to supply me with, at $1.50 per 100, while ordinary Cuneatum has been, as a rule, in over-supply at half that price. It is without question the best fern for cut fronds ever seen in this market.”

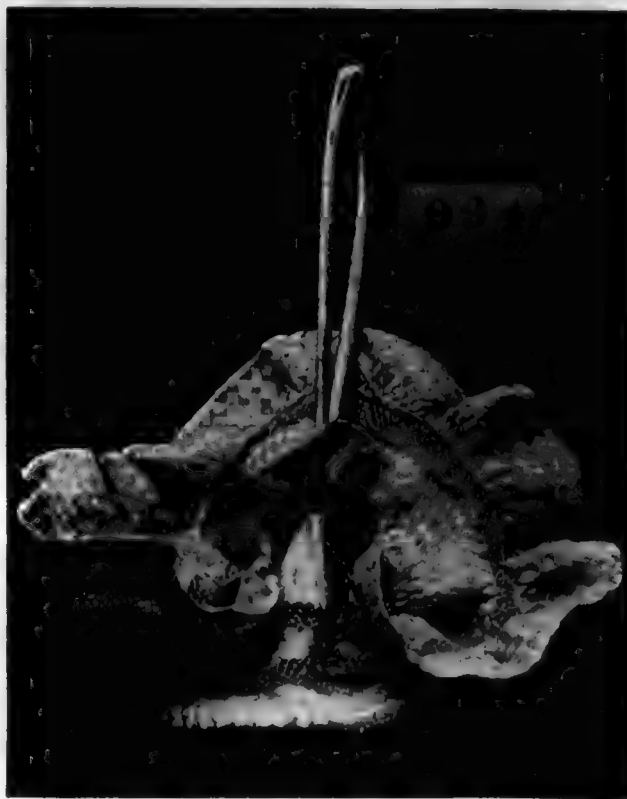

ALEXANDER MONTGOMERY, Natick, Mass.—“I am very pleased to hear that you have decided to put plants of your fern Adiantum Croweanum on the market. I have always been more or less interested in it, as I understand it originated from some plants of Adiantum Cuneatum that I sold you at the Waban Conservatories in the early eighties. I remember the circumstances very well, as I sold the balance of our stock to Robert Craig in 1890. Wishing you ever success with it.”

C. F. TRUE, Honolulu, H. I.—“Your Croweanum sent on October 17 came to hand on 29th ult., in very fair condition. Kindly send me full information in regard to it.”

WELCH BROS., Boston, Mass.—“We readily dispose of Croweanum for a much higher price than we receive for Adiantum of ordinary varieties shipped in by our growers.”

“By far the best Adiantum that has been introduced to the Florists' Trade. Is a free grower, the darkest green of the Adiantum family and longest stemmed. It has also the most graceful foliage; the average length of the fronds measuring 30 inches. It is by far the best keeper. Cut fronds can be kept fresh several weeks in a cool place. It is also one of the best ferns for a dwelling house. I have given presents of this fern to several Utica friends, and from my own observation note it grows better than the Boston fern. I gave up rose cultivation some ten months ago in order to devote all my attention to fern cultivation for cut fronds. I find from the same amount of bench room this fern pays me $1.50 to every $1.00 obtained from roses.”—PETER CROWE.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Memoranda on Easter Plants.

Six months from now our recollection of what sold best, of what we had a surplus and of what we could have sold more than we had, will not be as clear and definite as it is today, so I propose, in addition to the mental memoranda which we all make, to write down at once our experience with the leading plants that make up the Easter trade. Florists have to look a long way ahead and now you are ordering stock and preparing some crops for Easter of 1905. Experiences may be different in other localities; this is ours:

Longiflorum Lilies.

Lilies sold out clean. It is true they were not all in time. The black stemmed giganteum is the finest flower, but it was hard work to get it in on time, and another week would have given us many more in bloom. We shall not get such another February and March soon, I hope, and Easter was very early. Next year it is very late. The floribunda variety were all in. We saw few of the old Bermuda type.

Crimson Ramblers.

Crimson Rambler roses, when well flowered, sold fairly well, but when bare at the base of plant they did not go. I still believe one-year-old dormant plants, cut hard back, started cool and induced to make four or five moderate-sized canes, properly ripened off in the fall and then tied into neat, compact plants are much better for our purpose than those lifted from the field in November. Now is the time to start the dormant plants in 6 or 7-inch pots.

White Lilacs.

The white lilacs sold very good this year. They are not expensive to start with and bring a good price, but be careful where you get the stock. We had some from one of our reliable home firms that were excellent and a hundred or two we imported, which were complete rubbish. In this, as with other plants of this class, 5 or 10 cents on the first cost is no consideration if you get the quality. De Marley is a splendid variety to cut and bunches of it were in great demand.

Of azaleas there were plenty, in fact rather too many, and a good many are left over. Take care of them, for they will make your best plants for another year.

Rhododendrons.

Rhododendrons, when fine in color and well flowered, sold well. It is not necessary that you should be bothered with these large plants till the middle of next January unless you have a good root house where you can keep them. Let the importer keep them for you. There are firms which have the conveniences and they are better in a cool place than they are in the greenhouse.

The astilbe is very useful for cutting, but few sell in pots. There are so many other pretty plants, and for the price you get for them they need an awful lot of room.

Well flowered plants of Marie Louise violets sold well. Usually about the last of March they throw up a great quantity of bloom and if lifted and potted they are very attractive. They are a pot or pan of violets, and that's enough to sell them.

Best Inexpensive Plant.

Of all the inexpensive plants that went quickly the best was Primula obconica. The man who grew the large quantity of these for the local market did not sow them till May and during the fall months, or up to New Year's, they were planted out on a bench in a cool house, then lifted and potted into a 4 or 5-inch pot. This pretty plant pays no more attention to root disturbance than a pansy, and not so much.

benches but six or seven weeks. They were particularly well budded, compact plants this year. This plant is all blossom and no foliage. With a few plants we rubbed off some of the center buds and the leaf growth started at once and they were very much the prettiest plants.

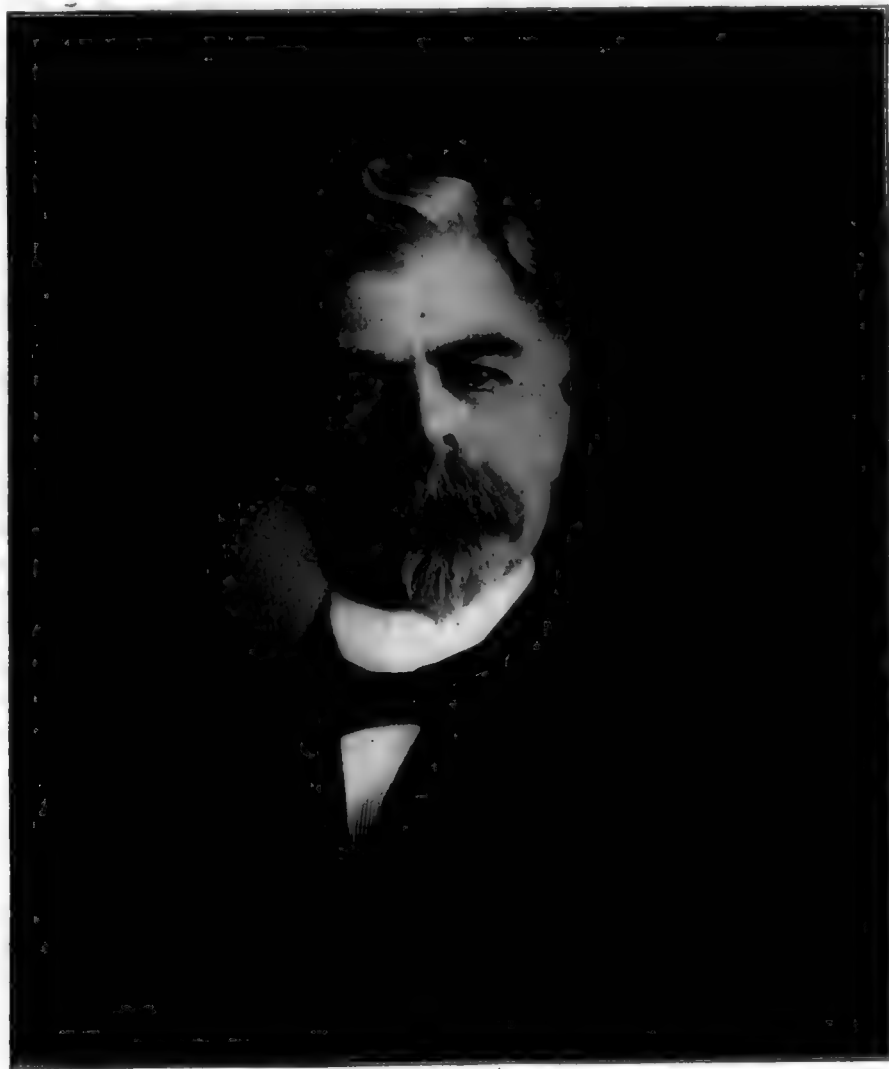

Bulbous Stock.

Of bulbous stuff, the tulips in pans went the best. Of all the tulips for a pan, don't forget that Murillo is the king, they come so even and true, and there is nothing like the satiny, delicate pink. Next in favor was the red and yellow Tournesol, very showy, and pans of Von Sion narcissus sold well. Hyacinths don't go quite as well as the tulips, rich as a pan of these are; the odor is a little strong for many.

People are about tired of the genista. It is pretty but the public are on to it that it is the most disappointing of all plants. Care or no care, it begins to droop or lose its flowers as soon as it leaves the greenhouse. Don't bother with large plants. A neat little plant in a 5-inch pot is all you want, if any.

Various Novelties.

We tried a few other things this year and shall not bother with all of them again. If you can get well budded, nicely formed little bushes of Prunus triloba it is easy to force, does not take up bench

Alex. Montgomery, President American Rose Society.

There were a few plants of Bougainvillea Sanderiana to be seen, and they sold, but you don't want a great many. Strange, six or seven years ago we had a lot of moderate-sized, well-flowered plants of this and we had to do a good deal of talking to sell any of them.

Azalea mollis sold well and it is a very profitable plant. Its first cost is trifling and it occupies the greenhouse room more than a few weeks and is very pretty. It is Japanese-like, you know. Cydonia or Pyrus japonica was a dead failure; not enough bloom. We can do without it and it would only sell to those hunting for something that no one else had. Wistaria sinensis was another failure with us and we will let someone else grow it. A few years ago I saw at Wm. Edgar's, at Waverley, Mass., some very beautiful plants of wistaria, but they must have been larger and better prepared plants than we imported.

Unless you have the convenience of a root house, or cold storage, or cool cellar this has been an awful winter for keeping such hardy plants as these till it was time to force. The majority of florists have only the cold frame, with some protection, to keep these plants and that is good enough in ordinary seasons, but this year it went through a foot of hemlock boughs, froze the plants into a solid mass and three feet into the ground below (more or less).

We had but few metrosideros (bottle brush) and a few were enough. That very handsome plant, Acacia armata, does not take as it deserves to. There were some fine plants of it offered in the Main street stores, but I am told the demand for them was poor.

The Hybrid Roses.

And now I have reserved to the last the plant that above all was in demand, that sold on sight, that everybody wanted and always will, viz., a well-flowered hybrid perpetual rose. We charged 25 cents a bud and flower for Magna Charta, Baroness Rothschild, Ulrich Brunner and others. Now, what is there better than that? And, I repeat, they will always sell. You can wait till fall and then buy some good home-grown stock for next spring's forcing or you can buy some one-year-old stock now and grow them on your own place. I prefer the latter plan.

Plant them in the field as soon as the ground is workable and cut down to within a few inches of the ground; the lower tion because I had neither seen nor heard of it. Easter was that year on March 25. On the first day of April I planted a bench 6x100' with fine young American Beauties from 4-inch pots. The soil had grown mums the previous summer and lilies had stood on the soil all winter, but I had a piece of tar paper beneath each to keep the worms out and prevent the soil from getting soggy. After a few days' drying out it was in good order and, with a liberal allowance of bone flower and some good rotten manure, in went the roses. They jumped from the day they were planted and from the middle of June to October I cut several thousand flowers. I remember one Sunday morning in July that the bench was photographed at 5 a. m. and then I cut 160 blooms. At $2 to $3 a dozen, retail, it was a most profitable house; I should say about 1000 per cent more than a bench of mums.

By the middle of November I had them slightly dried off and then they were lifted and potted into 6-inch. When lifting we cut them down to about eighteen inches and did not let them get dry and freeze (a big mistake if I had). Early, or perhaps it was the middle of January, they were brought into a house at about 45 and cut down to six and eight inches. At Easter, and many before Easter, they were sold for $2.50 and $3 apiece. Many of them had fifteen perfect flowers and buds; every break was a flower with a stem a foot to eighteen inches long. I could do it again, but strange to say it has never been repeated here. The earliness of planting was an advantage and they were grand little plants to start with, but I would bet a new hat I could repeat it if I had the care of them. That was doing well, and we need to have some things do well, for all our ventures are not profitable. Many do not think American Beauty is a good pot rose; treated as above it's the best of all. It will give more perfect flowers than any hybrid I have ever seen.

THE EASTER TRADE.

There is a remarkable uniformity in the reports on Easter business this year. From every section of the country comes word of sales aggregating more than ever in the history of the trade. The exact extent of the increase is difficult to estimate, but it is a substantial gain. It is noteworthy, however, that in nearly every locality the increase in retail business was principally due to larger sales of flowering plants. In only an occasional locality outside the wholesale centers was there any considerable increase in the sales of cut flowers, although a very large business was everywhere done in this department. In all but the older and most wealthy communities it was found that the high-priced plants were somewhat slow sale and in many cases retailers had more or less expensive stock left on hand. The medium-priced plants were the best sellers, lilies and azaleas being most popular as of yore. There was a big sale for the cheap bulbous stock in pans, but in the larger cities, where expenses of conducting the business are high, the leading retailers are not willing to handle plants at much less than $1 each.

Next to the lily, which is the flower of the day, the carnation was the popular item. It is fair to suppose that never in a single week were so many carnations marketed as during this Easter week and seldom, even at Christmas, has the average price been so good. Roses sold well and violets were popular in many communities where Sunday was a warm and pleasant day, but bulbous stock in general was slow sale.

It is noteworthy that in nearly every section of the country there were adequate supplies of all kinds of stock. True, here and there there was a shortage in some particular item, or perhaps along the whole list, but in the wholesale centers there was plenty of stock, of the very best of quality, and at reasonable prices. It is a pleasant reflection that there was less pickling in evidence than ever before and that this disastrous practice seems to be on the decline.

you cut them the stronger will be the breaks. If these were planted for a permanent rose bed, just keeping them hoed clean of weeds might do; but for this purpose, forcing, you want to be sure of a strong growth. So in a dry spell they should be soaked and when hot weather sets in they should be mulched. Do everything to induce a strong, vigorous growth and when November 10 comes the wood will be ripe; then lift and pot. Tens of thousands of roses were frozen up last fall that should have been lifted. There is an advantage in having them on your own place, as there need be no drying out between lifting and potting.

A Success With Beauties.

Now and then the dullest of us get a little inspiration and I am going to conclude with relating something I did about nine years ago. I call it inspira-

ROSES.Notes.

Now that Easter is a thing of the past the benches which were monopolized by plants for that occasion will, or should be, empty. Many growers defer repotting their roses until this room is available, which is not always a profitable plan, especially when Easter happens to be late, but in these times of strenuous competition we have to make many shifts which are not always to our liking.

As soon as we can get the room this repotting should be attended to in order to give the plants more root nourishment, sunshine and breathing space. Beauties, which are the first to suffer from being pot-bound and overcrowded, should receive first attention. When warm weather commences these, if left pot-bound, soon get into a hard and stunted condition from which it takes them a long time to recover. Overcrowding is a sure way to lose the bottom foliage, as during warm weather they require large supplies of water and syringing, which is sure to cause softness of the leaves and young wood, a condition inviting black spot, mildew and other troubles.

I have always had the best success with Beauties when the half-inch shift was practiced, the foliage, though smaller, being of a firmer texture and the wood more solid than when larger shifts were used. And though the plants may not be quite so large at planting time, they invariably go to work quicker, make more bushy plants and are not so susceptible to troubles as are the larger and softer stock produced by using the larger shift.

Varieties such as Golden Gate and Ivory, being less dense of foliage, do not require so much room as Bride and Bridesmaid, but should have the same amount of attention as regards repotting, ventilation, etc.

Green fly and red spider will now require careful looking after, as if they are allowed to get a foothold among the young and tender foliage they are difficult to get rid of and do a deal of damage in a very short time.

Frequent sprinkling of the paths during bright weather serves to keep the requisite amount of moisture in the atmosphere, without which it is impossible to retain that fresh and well-fed appearance the foliage ought to have.

As the season advances more air will have to be given, and as less firing will be necessary the dangers of an attack of mildew will be multiplied and the means of subduing this pest will be lessened.

This condition should make us all the more careful in the regulation of air and the maintenance of a steady temperature, using at the same time all the other safeguards at our disposal.

New Sorts.

Those who intend investing in some of the new disseminations should do so as early as possible, so that the plants may have time to grow into good stocky stuff by planting time and also to get them accustomed to the soil and water before planting in the bench. I have found this a much safer plan than to wait until planting time and then have to take the chances of late propagated stock, which may have been treated in quite a different manner and under different conditions from my own.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.Suitable Soils.

If you are having some nice bright weather and the ground is drying off, you need not be idle while you are waiting for the weather to settle. In our section we do not care to risk planting carnations in the field until after April 15 to 20.

If your sod pile is not too wet you would better have it turned over now and thoroughly mixed. Especially should it be done now if it was not done last fall, but even if it was done then it will do the soil good to be turned again. Do not touch it, however, if it is in a wet condition, but let it lie until it is dry enough to crumble nicely when being shoveled over. To handle it in a wet condition will ruin it for planting this season, and only a thorough freezing will put it into usable condition again.

Some growers mix a lot of bonemeal and other fertilizers into the soil at the spring turning. I know of no very great objections to this practice, but I have never considered it superior to mixing it in the summer at planting time. A good sod, from a piece of good ground, with a good one-fifth of cow manure makes a good base for the plants to work on and the other manures and fertilizers can be added as they are needed. If you do mix some bone into the soil at this turning I would advise you to use a rather coarse grade, as it will last much longer than the bone-flour we use in the fall on the benches.

When getting your carnation patch ready for planting you should be careful, too, that the soil is not too wet when it is plowed. Better wait until May rather than to plow up a wet piece of ground to plant on. It will get lumpy and all the cultivating you can do will not make it fit for plants to grow on. If you only plant a few thousand it is just as well to plow the whole patch at one time, but if you plant 25,000 or more you would better plow it as you plant it, say enough to last a couple of days at a time. This can be done best with a side hill plow. With one of these you can plow across and back as many times as you like without leaving any furrows. You will find your plants take hold much quicker in fresh plowed soil, besides it being much easier to plant in. If there is anything that will try the temper of your men it is to have to plant in dry, lumpy soil, and progress will be very slow.

the ground in the spring, but would much rather have it put on in the fall or early winter. The strength will then be washed into the soil by the winter rains, and I think there will be less danger of stem-rot. I don't care to have the field soil too rich. A. F. J. BAUR.

CYCAS REVOLUTA IN BLOOM.

The cycads are a singular class of plants in many respects, being considered by some authorities as a sort of connecting link between the conifers and the palms, an opinion that seems to be borne out to some extent by the fact that their stems contain both a resinous sap and a farinaceous pith, being rather a strange combination to be found in the same plant.

The flowers of Cycas revoluta are unisexual, the two sexes being found in different plants and being entirely distinct from each other in the manner of flowering. The specimen we illustrate is one that has been photographed in a Californian garden, and is a male plant of considerable age, the sex being indicated by the large cone-like inflorescence that may be seen growing from the center of the crown of the plant.

This cone is formed of scales in much the same manner as a large pine cone, and produces the anthers of the flowers from the under side of these scales.

The female cycas, when flowering, throws up a crown of short, woolly, altered leaves, on the edges of which are produced the seeds, the latter bearing some resemblance to horse chestnuts without their shells. The inflorescence of the female cycas is one of the most singular with which I am acquainted, and the flowering of such a plant is always an event of some interest to those not familiar with the vagaries of nature as shown in this class of plants.

But while the flowering of either a male or female cycas is a matter of botanical interest, it is not viewed with

AN ENGLISH GROWERS' NOTES.

There are few English growers of the chrysanthemum who are more widely known than W. Wells. He has spent a long lifetime in the business and has a minute knowledge of all its departments. In recent years he has handled what is known as the Wells-Pockett sets of novelties, which have included some of the best sorts introduced to the American trade. Among last year's set may be mentioned William Duckham. It may also be noted that in the exhibit of twenty-five blooms which captured the sweepstakes cup at the New York show last fall, thirteen of the twenty-five varieties were introduced, and distributed by Mr. Wells. At this show he also staged an exhibit of blooms sent all the way from England, arriving in very good shape.

Several years ago Mr. Wells came out with a treatise entitled "Culture of the Chrysanthemum." This ran through two editions within a very short time and he is now out with the third edition, revised, enlarged and brought down to date. He covers the entire subject all the way from the introduction of the chrysanthemum from China in 1764 to the novelties exhibited at the English and American exhibitions in 1903. He gives cultural instructions and also devotes chapters to the insect pests and diseases with which the grower has to contend. One chapter is devoted to a review of the progress of the chrysanthemum in America, introduced with the statement that he believes that few English growers realize the popularity of the chrysanthemum in the United States. He comments on the fact that the names of Mr. Duckham and Mr. Herrington have been more frequently mentioned in recent years than those of any other growers in this country.

Many differences are pointed out between the cultural methods necessary in come to be turned out of these pots from the small roots sticking to the sides.

Remember that the more roots you have to your plant the better it will be. To secure abundance of roots pot up gradually from small to full-sized pots, by various sizes. Every time the root reaches the side of the pot it branches and runs around. When this is effected it is time for a further shift.

Keep cuttings close, either covered with a glass or shut up in a case. This maintains the moisture all around the cutting and prevents evaporation of the juices of the cutting, which would otherwise wither and die.

Use long, clean labels, upon which place name, date, number, etc., leaving room for further remarks during the summer.

Keep all your dates for future guidance.

Use preventives against disease at intervals, rather than delay till appearance of malady.

Remember that certain sorts, as Madame Carnot, require unenriched soil for first growth.

When receiving new plants from the nurserymen it is best to keep them close for two or three days, in case they have been taken from a warm house.

Always be punctual as regards the time announced for the completion of the staging of your flowers at shows ready for the judges. A rule in vogue at Hull is to ring a bell fifteen minutes before the judging, and an announcement is made that only a quarter of an hour will be allowed. At the stroke of the clock the sweepers commence at one end and every one is cleared out.

"The Culture of the Chrysanthemum" is worth reading by every grower. It is sent post free on receipt of 36 cents by W. Wells & Co., Earlswood, Redhill, Surrey, England.

THE DATE OF EASTER.

One of our exchanges has published the following authoritative if somewhat technical statement as to the date of Easter:

There were centuries of controversy over the proper time for the celebration of Easter. It was in the second century that the dispute arose between the eastern and western churches.

The great mass of eastern Christians celebrated Easter on the 14th day of the first Jewish month or moon, considering it to be equivalent to the Jewish Passover. The western churches celebrated it on the Sunday after the 14th day, holding that it was the commemoration of the resurrection of Jesus.

The council of Nicea decided in 325 in favor of the western usage, branding the eastern with the name of "quartodeciman" heresy, but this decision only settled the point that Easter was to be held, not on a certain day of the month or moon, but on a Sunday.

It was not until 1582 that Easter was definitely fixed. It was debated at the time of the introduction of the Gregorian calendar whether Easter should continue to be movable or a fixed Sunday after the 21st of March be adopted. Ancient usage prevailed.

It is not the actual moon of the astronomers, nor even the mean moon of the astronomers, that regulates the time of Easter, but an altogether imaginary moon, whose periods are so contrived that the calendar new moon follows the real new moon sometimes by two or three days.

The effect is that the 14th of the calendar moon, which had from the time of Moses been considered "full moon" for ecclesiastical purposes, falls generally on the 15th or 16th of the real moon.

With this explanation, then, that by "full moon" is meant the 14th day of the calendar moon, the rule is that Easter day is always the first Sunday after the paschal full moon, which happens upon or next after the 21st of March, the beginning of the ecclesiastical year. If the full moon happens upon a Sunday Easter day is the Sunday after.

One object in arranging the calendar moon was that Easter might never fall on the same day as the Jewish Passover. They did occur together, however, in 1805, 1825 and 1903, and will occur together in 1923, 1927 and 1981.

The Jewish Passover usually occurs in the week before Easter and never before the 26th day of March or after the 25th of April. The Christian festival is never before the 22nd of March or after the 25th of April.

In 1761 and 1818 Easter fell on the 22d of March, but this will not happen in any year of the twentieth century. The latest Easter in this century will be in 1943, on the 25th of April.

ELECTRIC HEAT.

Would it be practicable to use iron wire instead of pipe for heating a greenhouse, running electricity over the wire instead of steam through the pipes? This is the way street cars are heated. When you force more electricity over an iron wire than it should carry it begins to heat at once. If the greenhouses are

A SERIOUS ROSE PEST.

In recent years several of the large rose growers in the vicinity of Chicago have been troubled with minute larvæ which destroyed the buds and defied all efforts at eradication. An appeal to the Illinois State Laboratory of Natural History at the State University resulted in an investigation by F. M. Webster, M. A., who classified the rose midge and has now published an illustrated bulletin on it. He describes the midge and larvæ at length, so that growers who have met the pest will find it easily recognizable; but he does not name a practical remedy. The larvæ are "very tenacious of life," he says, and the growers will bear him out in his statement. Hydrocyanic acid gas will kill them if exposed, but not those working in the buds.

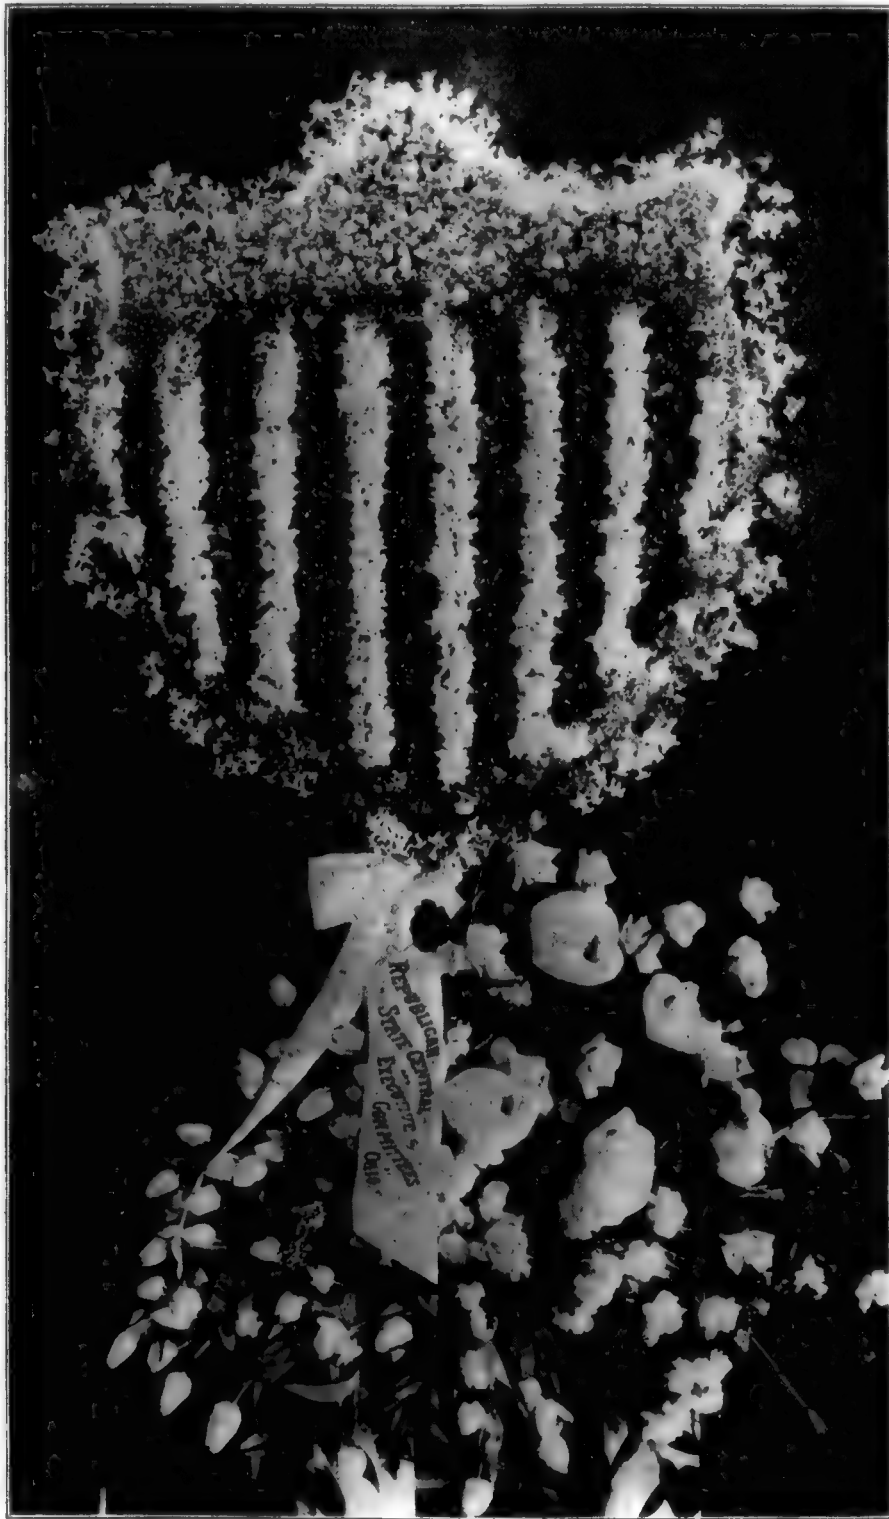

The complete bulletin will be sent to those who address the State Laboratory at Urbana, Ill. The less technical parts follow:

About the year 1897, in the vicinity of Chicago, Ill., certain varieties of roses grown under glass, notably the Meteor, were attacked by great numbers of minute cecidomyian larvæ which destroyed the terminal leaf and blossom buds. In the greenhouses of one extensive rose grower, the injury was so severe as to render the production of the Meteor unprofitable, and he stopped growing it for a time, until the pest seemed to have disappeared. Strangely enough, another grower, whose houses were separated from those of the first only by a narrow alley, did not at that time suffer at all from the ravages of the insect, but continued to grow the Meteor in his rose houses without difficulty until sometime after, when he, too, began to experience severe losses on account of its depredations. The species was not definitely determined at that time, and it is impossible in the light of later investigations to say with certainty whether or not more than one was engaged in these attacks. Since then, however, a number of extensive rose growers about Chicago have been obliged to abandon the growing of this particular variety of rose on account of its extreme liability to attack from these larvæ.

In 1900, Mr. D. W. Coquillett published a paper reporting similar injuries to roses grown under glass in New Jersey in 1886 and 1889; New York in 1890; Washington, D. C., in 1891, 1894 and 1896; Boston in 1894, and Chicago, as has been stated, in 1897. Apparently the same species was sent to the United States Department of Agriculture from Cleveland, Ohio, in 1903.

On May 16, 1903, a firm located in the vicinity of Chicago, engaged in growing roses extensively under glass, advised the Illinois State Entomologist of serious trouble among their Meteors, evidently due to a minute white worm which attacked the buds and destroyed them. Early in June, Mr. C. A. Hart, being in that vicinity, visited the premises by Dr. Forbes' direction, and brought some of the affected buds to the office. The larvæ found in them were very small, white, except those seemingly full grown which were tinged with orange.

The matter was now placed in my hands for investigation, and on June 11, acting under instructions, I visited the rose houses containing the injured plants. Larvæ were found in the young rose-buds of both leaf and blossom, but more abundantly in the latter, and also eggs, which, from their position in these buds, indicated that they were those of the same species as the larvæ. Several very minute female midge-like flies were also taken, seemingly in the act of ovipositing in the blossom buds.

I have never seen the larvæ attacking the native wild roses, even about Chicago, though, in the near vicinity of infested rose houses, I have found them in buds of the variety known as The Bride, growing in the open air. The manner of hibernation is not well understood, but in the rose houses there is no injury done by the larvæ from late October until late the following May. A thorough inspection of large rose houses about Chicago, November 18 to 20, did not reveal a single larva or adult, even where serious damage had been wrought a few months before, and an inspection made on January 29, 1904, also failed to reveal their presence.

In the rose houses, the larvæ attack the Meteor, Wootton, Bride, Madame Chatenay, La France, Ivory and Golden Gate, but are far more fatal to the first than to any other variety. The insect first appears in such rose houses as are old and more or less open on account of cracks and crevices, or else in such as are new and tight, requiring much ventilation. In the case previously referred to, where only an alley separated infested from uninfested premises, the uninfested houses were given the least possible ventilation consistent with the growth of the roses, while those infested were more generally ventilated. Later on, these conditions were reversed, and the situation as to insects changed also, the premises that had before escaped being now overrun.

An experienced foreman in the employ of a firm of extensive rose growers whose premises were infested with this midge, informed me that the insect first attracted his attention by attacking those buds that were highest up and nearest to the glass, and that the larvæ were only to be found in such buds as were in close proximity to the glass, those situated lower down not being at all affected, thus indicating that one rose house may become infested from another by adults, and not necessarily from the introduction of infested plants. From the fact that there are but few larvæ present up to the month of May, but that they increase in number during the summer and altogether disappear in late October, it would seem that they follow very closely the habits of the British species, Dichelomyia rosarum.

The eggs are deposited either in the unfolding leaf buds or under the sepals of the blossom buds, the latter position seemingly being preferred by the females where there is an opportunity for selection. In case the former is chosen, the eggs are deftly inserted in the conduplicated leaves between what would, later on, constitute the upper surfaces of the two halves of the unfolded leaf. The maggots appear to fasten the edges together with some viscous matter, thus forming a sort of pod within which they attain their larval growth. If there are few larvæ, their effect is to cause more or less prominent swellings on what would later become the lower surface of the leaf; if there are many larvæ in the leaf, it simply becomes distorted and discolored and dies. In case of blossom buds, the effort of the female seems to be to place her eggs as far under and near the base of the sepal as possible, but there does not appear to be any regularity either in their exact position or numbers. Occasionally they will be found stuck in the sutures separating the sepals. The ovipositor of the female is capable of great extension, and I have observed it to be curved, coiled, and twisted in her efforts to push it under the closely adhering sepal of a very young bud. Frequently, after this has been accomplished she is unable to extricate it, and dies attached to the bud. In one case I found two females on a single bud, they having apparently perished in this manner. Nevertheless, the females seem to be strikingly attached to their labor of ovipositing, as, in a propagating house where there were thousands of young plants with but few blossom buds, if they were driven from one of these they would fly but a few inches away and soon return. They are exceedingly minute, and obscure while on the wing, having much the appearance of floating particles of dust.

While the larvæ are at first usually well covered by the sepals and folded leaves, if excessively abundant they will, later swarm out and over the outer surface, especially of the blossom buds.

In England and Europe there is also a rose-attacking insect which can only be separated anatomically from our species by the number of antennal joints, a character known to be somewhat variable. The habits of the two are very much alike, except that in Britain the larvæ affect the leaf buds and not the blossom buds, both in the rose houses and in the open air. Our species attacks roses only in rose houses, largely confining its ravages to the blossom buds, but when attacking the leaf buds affects them as does the English species. In Britain, and in the open air, the wild, or dogrose, though it grows rapidly, cannot certainly make as rapid growth as does the Meteor in our rose houses, where all the ingenuity of the grower is centered on producing the most rapid and vigorous growth possible. It is doubtful if the American species could, under these conditions, develop in any considerable numbers in the leaf buds, as the growth of the buds is so accelerated by artificial conditions that there is not time for the larvæ to develop within them before they become too much expanded and too tough to admit of the larvæ affecting them. The blossom bud, being of a slower development, affords a longer time for the larvæ to mature, and, besides, presents food of a different character from that of a leaf bud.

To sum up the whole discussion, then, it is not now possible to regard our American species as the same as that occurring in England and Europe, known as Dichelomyia rosarum Hardy, but that it is closely allied to that species can not be doubted. We must wait for future studies to show us whether our Americanized form has sufficiently developed to admit of its being separated as a new genus and species.

DAHLIA PROPAGATION.

If this subject is not already talked to death it seems to me it will be shortly, but as I think I must have been the innocent cause of all this discussion, perhaps a few words are due the public from me, and at the same time I wish to express my appreciation to the publishers who have so kindly given space to this question.

What is it all over, anyway? Simply that I have presumed, without asking permission, to issue a trade catalogue in which I illustrate the comparative sizes of dahlia tubers. A reproduction of the illustration appears herewith. The following is the paragraph relating to the illustration:

A glance at the illustration will show how deceptive the words "field clump" or "whole root" may be. Some growers propagate from cuttings and some from tubers. Each produces what is known commercially as "clumps." It is therefore of the greatest importance to the purchaser which kind of a clump the advertisement or quotation refers to, Fig. 2 or Fig. 3. The figures presented represent fairly the relative sizes of commercial dahlia tubers as grown in this country.

As explained in my catalogue, the sizes are comparative and not fixed weights. The variety I used for the illustration was Countess of Lonsdale, which every grower knows is only a medium-sized root, as seen in Fig. 3. Had I used Earl of Pembroke, Gloriosa, or some other large-rooted variety, Fig. 3 would probably be marked from five to seven pounds and the other figures would be correspondingly larger.

With one exception all the writers who have expressed themselves are practically agreed as touching the uniform quality of stock grown from tubers and stock grown from cuttings, myself among the rest. The one dissenting voice is that of my friend W. P. Peacock, who in the March 24 number of the REVIEW expresses his views freely on this "burning question," as he terms it. His ideas are so widely at variance with recognized authorities that I venture to say that his position upon a number of points cannot be maintained by the evidence. In my opinion growers will be slow to accept his statement that a rooted cutting planted out in May will grow a larger plant, of superior quality and have a larger root by fall than a tuber under the same conditions. Why should it?

Neither am I convinced that propagation from cuttings is more expensive. I have always believed it to be a far cheaper method. The evidence of this is seen in the fact that all dealers offer green plants at a much lower price than the dry tubers. There are good reasons why this should be so, as a green plant can be developed and placed on sale or set in the ground all within a short month, while a tuber must receive room and care for a full year.

Neither am I at all convinced that there is no danger from over-propagation or late planting. That a dahlia will stand a great deal of propagation is freely admitted, but there is a limit, especially to late propagation, which will give the young plant no time to mature its strength for the next season's growth. In my judgment many of the weaknesses of the newer varieties are directly traceable to over-propagation.

That tuber-grown stock is necessarily badly broken in the handling, may or may not be true. If careless help is employed it will be true, but I lose only a very small percentage of roots through breakage. And here let me say that all varieties with ill-formed roots or weak necks should be discarded, as they prove a continual source of annoyance to growers, dealers and amateurs. With the many thousands of varieties to select from there is no need of growing any but well-formed roots and flowers.

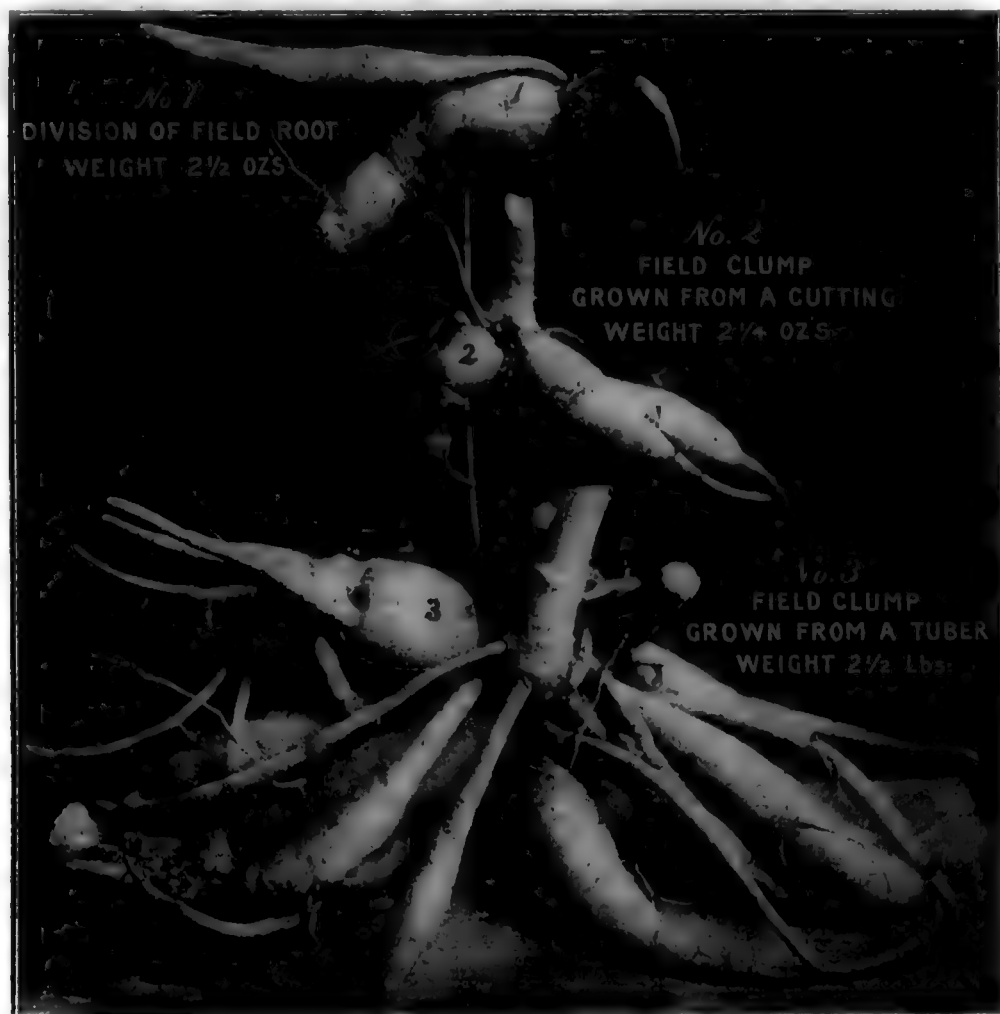

I was particularly impressed by one of Mr. Peacock's remarks when he said we should get down to a "given variety." For comparison he has selected Kriemhilde as the subject of his illustration and the major portion of his remarks. So for the purpose of the argument we will take Kriemhilde. His illustration shows three very compact specimens not susceptible to division by reason of the interwoven condition of the roots. His contention that these will not break in handling will be admitted.

The combined weight of these three as shown is six and one-quarter pounds, or a little over two pounds each for the average. In another article reference is made to these same three specimens in the following language: "Many other varieties grow much larger and, of course, others grow much smaller." By this statement are we to understand that these specimens are to be considered a fair average for cutting-grown stock?

This will bring us face to face with a business proposition. Many if not all wholesale dealers in dahlias have two prices, one at which the purchaser pays the expressage and one for small orders at which the dealer prepays the package to any portion of the United States. This additional fee for delivery is from 20 to 25 cents per dozen. Mr. Peacock has such a notice in his 1904 catalogue. Are we to understand that he will send one dozen tubers of Kriemhilde to a distant city for 25 cents? By mail these would of necessity be six packages of four pounds each and $2 worth of stamps would be necessary, not counting anything for weight of packing material. This might do with a high-priced variety, but how about those varieties priced at $1 per dozen?

Does not this very general and fairly uniform charge of 25 cents a dozen for postal charges go to prove the correctness of my contention when I place the weight of commercial dahlia tubers at from two and a half to five ounces each, which is amply large for all practical purposes and as large as dealers can handle profitably in a mail or express trade?

Is there any need of increasing the size of the tuber? Do not the small pot roots as supplied by the English growers, weighing only one ounce, produce just as fine plants and flowers as the large roots grown for the trade in our country? I remember that when I began as an amateur, twenty-three years ago, we had to send to the old country for our new varieties, as there was no one on this side, so far as I know, who specialized or paid much attention to dahlias, although a number of dealers were carrying limited lists of them. Comparing the present with my early experience in dahlia growing, I see a vast change and improvement in varieties, but no change in method of propagation or results. We used both cuttings and divisions then, just as we do now.

With some of the statements of the advocate of cuttings all of the craft will agree, viz.: That a dahlia root is a tuber and not a bulb. That the tuber nourishes the eye. That the eye shrivels when the tuber is cut off. That a tuber broken at the neck is worthless. These things are self-evident. Yes, I had almost forgotten that information about the hatchet and cleaver for cutting the roots apart. My foreman thinks I had better get the cleaver and when not in use on the dahlias he could use it to disbud the carnations.

NEW YORK.

The Easter Trade.

Easter 1904 is but a memory, but all things considered it is a pleasant one. After the drizzling rain of Thursday and the steady downpour of Good Friday, Saturday morning dawned clear and beautiful and floricultural New York was saved from disaster. But the long anxiety ends in universal success. "All's well that ends well," and this was certainly a glorious ending. Everybody has congratulations due. The growers will certainly shake hands with themselves. With hardly an exception the pickling business that has brought so much trouble in the past, both to the guilty picklers and the honest and conscientious ones who did not pickle, but who suffered in the general retribution, was eschewed. A few roses ashamed to lift their dishonest heads and a few carnations glad to hide in sleep the record of their futile attempt to hoodwink the careful buyer, were all that appeared to even keep in evidence this shadow of a system, let us hope, out of fashion for all time. The Christmas experience bore abundant fruit, not only as to the pickling menace, but the day of abnormal prices seems to be also at an end. Reasonable prices were expected by the growers and the result proves the wisdom of common sense expectations.

On Sunday at noon hardly a flower of any kind could be found in the wholesale stores and the wholesalers, encouraged by sensible confidence and co-operation on the part of their shippers, made a record for themselves that will never be forgotten. They asked only fair prices and not a man of them went home dissatisfied to his Easter dinner. In fact, the wholesale district was one vast smile on Sunday and the faces of the patient men who have done so much to make the cut flower business what it is were an inspiration.

The plantsmen have especial cause for gratitude. In none of the great establishments to which New York and surrounding cities look for their supply can a salable blooming plant be found. The requirements of the retailers were sufficient to clean out everything worth purchasing and, best of all, the public, which after all is the important factor in the whole consideration, nobly appreciated the feast the retailers had spread and Sunday night saw barely a salable plant of any kind in any retail store in the city. All day Sunday the selling proceeded, until for lack of supply the weary workers were forced to close the doors and rest. Many of them had not slept for forty-eight hours. None of the wholesale houses was closed on Saturday night. It was one of the "all night sessions" that may be recurred to without regret.

Not only was it a plant Easter, but the cut flower department is again in evidence. The public forced it. The retailers saw quickly the wisdom of responding. Once again the violet is queen. In the great parade on Fifth avenue every lady had a corsage of violets to add its share to the perfume and beauty of the day. Never was such a parade seen in New York and never was the violet so dominant. So much for fair prices and fine, fresh flowers, which arrived in double the last year's quantity and yet found a growing demand to the very end and long after every flower was gone. The top price for specials touched $1, there were not many of them; 75 cents was the average. Poorer grades sold for 50 cents, a few even less than that. Millions were disposed of, one house handling over a million.

Wholesale cut flower men handling plants were well pleased with results. Few were left over. Lilies, especially, sold well. The estimated top price of 12 cents was correct. Every lily plant and every cut lily in the market was sold. Inferior grades brought 8 to 10 cents, but the best were never wavering in value and 12 cents was paid without question or protest. Beauties held well at 35 cents for the very best; occasionally a few touched 40 cents. Brides and Maids, as the day closed, advanced to 15 cents, the stock of the finest being less than expected, but 12 cents was the average. Carnations held well at $3 to $5, with novelties from $6 to $8. Except a few sleepy ones, before referred to, not a flower was left unsold. The only "dead one" was the daffodil. There were too many of them and no one felt very "yellow" this Easter.

The florists' supply firms and the "green goods" men had one of the best Easters in their history. The supply with many was totally inadequate.

Next year Easter will arrive very late and calculations are already making. Roses then will be abundant and I predict violets will honestly demand a higher price than they secured in 1904. Easter never comes before March 22, not later than April 25. But, of course, this is ancient history, though some may have forgotten it.

Since Easter.

Monday's cut flower market was a striking contrast to that of Saturday. Business was at a standstill; values dropped to normal figures; little stock of any kind reached the city. Violets especially were short, but the demand was unnoticeable. The reaction was universal. The general rest was beneficial to all concerned. With a continuance of the sunshine and the present temperature the end of the week will see enormous shipments and lower prices. The general expectation, however, indicates a good April, with a better business than any month of the present year to date.

Various Notes.

The seedsmen are busy with mail orders, and are ready for the inevitable rush which will come with the first actual spring day. The street nurserymen have begun to display their stock, the frost is rapidly disappearing, the department stores are offering rose bushes by hundred thousands and the voice of the robin is heard in the parks, where the grass begins to take on the first tints of emerald. Some predict no "spring," but a sudden transition to summer. The season is now of necessity a short one and three weeks behind the average.

The majority of bulb men returning from their annual tours report exceptionally good demands.

L. Ussing, of Cranford, N. J., sent in a fine supply of the English cowslip to Geo. Bradshaw, who disposed of them to good advantage and declared the market could have used many times the shipment.

Peter Ross, of Broadway Station, Flushing, had the misfortune to have a large portion of his Easter supply stolen from the greenhouses there.

The retail stores of New York were many of them floral exhibitions. Never were they so entrancingly decorated. The plants most popular and most in evidence were Crimson Ramblers, azaleas, rhododendrons, acacias, metrosideros, hydrangeas, tubs of lilies, ericas, bougainvillea and orchids. Hampers, Pompeian designs and baskets, artistically filled with blooming plants and ferns were especially in demand.

H. A. Molatsch, of Brooklyn, who has been very ill for some time, is now convalescing.

The New York Florists' Club will hold its regular monthly meeting next Monday, April 11. The Easter trade and its lessons will be discussed by the members and the commissary department, under Jno. B. Nugent's management, will be especially attractive and commemorative of a banner Easter.

Scollay, of Brooklyn, is the architect of the two new greenhouses being erected for Henry Hession, of Flatbush.

Arthur T. Boddington, of the Clucas & Boddington Co., has commenced business on his own account at 35 Warren street, having severed his connection with the Clucas & Boddington Co. Mr. Boddington is popular and has had many years of experience traveling for this firm, and some years ago for Pitcher & Manda. His trips have covered every part of the country, and his friends are legion.

Acting as the representative of the New York Market Gardeners' Association, John Birnie has leased the site of the old Clinton Market for three months for $1,000. Tents will be erected for shelter and $15 a grower will be charged for stands for the season. The association has fifty members. It is possible that a permanent market may be erected some day. No stands outside the grounds will be permitted this year.

Sigmund Geller has moved with his family for the summer to Sheephead Bay.

Bowling.

In the prize bowling contest of last week the second prize winner, Mr. Ford, was left out of our record. His total of 175 and the box of cigars won, are worthy of special mention. One more prize night will be given later on that will be conducted on different lines, the prizes being unwrapped and awarded the winners in the order of merit, so securing a better "run for their money."

The Bowling Club will meet at the alleys at 3 p. m. next Monday and a cordial invitation is tendered all florists to participate before attending the regular monthly meeting of the club.

The "aftermath" of Easter decreased the attendance at the alleys last Monday, many of the prominent men "resting from their labors." However, there was a fair turnout and some excellent scores were made, as the following list gives evidence:

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ST. LOUIS.

The Easter Trade.

Easter trade in our city, from all accounts, was somewhat larger than last year, and especially so with blooming plants. The increase in sales on these should run 50 per cent at some of the larger places. Reports from those who handled mostly cut flowers say trade on Saturday and Sunday was much better than last year. Among the west end florists, where the most plants are sold, it presented a very busy appearance in both cut flowers and plants. The north and south end florists also report the best Easter in years.

The trade was very fortunate in having beautiful, warm weather on Saturday, when most of the plant deliveries were made. The plant trade did not present any especially novel features. The strongest demand was for azaleas and lilies; these, with hydrangeas, Dutch hyacinths, tulips and cinerarias, sold well. Church decorations the past week were quite numerous with the plantsmen.

The wholesalers were kept very busy with both shipping and local trade. All these report a splendid trade in everything. A great quantity of lilies were disposed of at $15 per 100 blooms. The inferior grades in roses and carnations suffered somewhat, but first-class stock was not any too plentiful. In second and third-class stock plenty was to be had. Prices on roses ran from $3 to $8 per 100 and carnations from $3 to $6. American Beauties were in good demand at from $3 to $8 per dozen.

Bulbous stock of all kinds was very plentiful and the quality of the stock unusually good. On this stock the price remained as usual. Violets were poor, with the supply somewhat limited, the bulk of them being California. The best wholesaled at $1 and from that down to 40 cents per 100. A big lot of sweet peas were in the market on Saturday morning, of good quality, with fairly long stems; 40 to 75 cents per 100 was asked for these.

What the Retailers Say.

St. Louis florists certainly had the biggest Easter trade in years, if reports count for anything. Here is what some of the leading florists say of the business:

In South St. Louis, Diemer and Oscar Heile report a fine trade. William Schray & Sons, Carl Beyer, F. Fillmore, W. H. Kruse, George Windler and Fred Bruenig were kept busy with plants and cut flowers. At these places things look pretty well cleaned up.

Ellison Floral Co. had a very busy week and everything sold well. Easter trade was never better. Ostertag Bros. never had so much to do as this Easter. Henry reports that they have the new Jefferson Hotel opening this week Thursday, in which a big lot of cut flowers will be used.

The Eggeling Floral Co. say they could not have done any more business than they did. Young & Sons Co. sold out pretty clean on everything in plants and cut flowers.

Among the downtown florists Miss Badaracco, Fred Foster, Riessen Floral Co., Alex Siegel, Jas. Dunford and the St. Louis Palm Co. all report a heavy trade in cut flowers. Very few of these had any plants to speak of. All were kept busy disposing of their big stock of cut flowers.

Up-town, Otto Koenig says he had a big rush on everything, is glad it's over with, and now for the advance work on our convention. Fred Meinhardt also reports the biggest Easter trade in years; everything sold well, plants especially. Max Rotter has a good word for his Easter trade and is well satisfied with his business.

The west end florists are very enthusiastic regarding their Easter trade from the following expressions: F. C. Weber's trade in plants and cut flowers was very much better than in former years. All fancy stock sold clean. Theo. Miller was well pleased with his Easter business; plants and cut flowers sold much better than last year. C. C. Sanders had all he could do in the plant line and there was not much of anything left; cut flowers, too, had a good call. With Kalisch & Sons everything sold big, plants better than ever before, with not much of anything left. J. F. Windt could have sold more blooming plants; everything sold clean and it was the best Easter in years. Miss Newman had a fine trade, in fact better than expected. George Waldbart had not enough left to carry away in a chip basket; cut flower trade was beyond expectations. F. H. Weber had a fine trade; plants sold clean, with a big call for cut stuff. Mrs. Ayers had all she could do in cut flowers and plants; ten church decorations kept all hands busy.

Various Notes.

During the big rain storm last week Thursday hail did some damage. George Windler, at 4059 Delore street, was hit the heaviest. Mr. Windler reports about 250 lights of glass broken. Among the other florists in South St. Louis only a few lights were broken, not enough to make a claim. The storm also did considerable damage to the Cascade Gardens at the World's Fair grounds, which were repaired at once. Lightning also played a part in the damage to the Dustard Seed Co., on Third street. A thunderbolt passed through the roof, clear to the basement, setting fire to the woodwork. The damage is estimated at $200.

The landscape work around the English building in the World's Fair grounds is in fine shape and bulb stock is now in full bloom. Mr. Brown, the English landscape gardener, was congratulated on all sides for having the first flowers to bloom on the grounds. Other landscape work on the grounds is being greatly advanced by hard work.

Robert Karlstrom, forester for the park department at Hartford, Conn., is in town looking after the landscape work about the Connecticut building at the World's Fair. Mr. Karlstrom comes well recommended by our friend, Theodore Wirth, superintendent of public parks at Hartford.

PHILADELPHIA.

Easter Trade.

The volume of Easter business was very large. Opinions vary as to whether it exceeded that of last season; probably it did, as there are more greenhouses and more stores than a year ago, although few of the dealers taken individually exceeded their last year's business. Blooming plants were, of course, the leading feature of the Easter business. These sold exceptionally well. Azaleas and lilies head the list. Very many of the retailers had not a salable plant of either left on Monday. The department stores handled lilies in large quantities, one store had about 5,000, but pretty much all were sold by Good Friday. It was said on the street that this stock was purchased at 8 to 9 cents a flower. It was sold at 12 cents a flower, the prevailing price in the wholesale market. The stores, however, obtained 20 to 25 cents a flower. If they suffered from the competition of the department stores it was not evident. Hydrangeas, genistas, spiræas, bougainvilleas and pot roses were all in good demand. Crimson Rambler was hardly as popular as in the past. Well grown bulbous flowers in pots and pans were rather scarce. Hammers of plants were not so much in evidence as in the past. The week of cool, not to say cold weather, greatly favored the retailers. The rain interfered a little with the shopping perhaps, but there was no temptation to barter on the corner with the street vender, and the stock, once inside the stores, kept remarkably well. A good many lilies were late and a good many hydrangeas were green, but everything in condition was readily marketed.

The Market.

The Easter demand for cut flowers exceeded expectations. A week of cool, cloudy weather kept the quantity down, while it improved the quality and prices held firmly. Violets were the principal article on the list and the quantity used was something enormous. The leading retailers kept their growers busy picking, besides buying all they could get from the commission houses. The price advanced on special orders as high as $1.50 for doubles and $1 for singles. Practically all the cut lilies in the market were sold at from $10 to $12 per 100. Carnations were of fine quality and brought good prices. White did not seem scarce, but red did, curiously enough. Beauties, Brides, Maids and Liberties were all in active demand, and in many cases Sunday morning shipments were necessary to complete the orders. Most of the fancy Beauties brought $6 a dozen. Brides and Maids $15 100. Sweet peas were in fair demand. There was no particular call for lily of the valley, though a good many were used in small lots. Smilax was very scarce indeed. Callas brought good prices, from 12½ cents to 25 cents each.

At the Stores.

H. H. Battles did a heavy business all along the line. It is wonderful what push and system can accomplish in a limited space. Plants are sold chiefly from sample, quality guaranteed.

George Craig seemed well pleased with the business done, both in plants and flowers.

Robert Crawford & Son did a great business, especially in plants. They thought it exceeded past seasons, at any rate they could not have done more.

Hugh Graham did a decidedly larger business than a year ago. He noticed an increased demand for specimen azaleas. He sold all his large stock of lilies advantageously.

Joseph Kift & Son cleared up an immense quantity of stock and were well pleased with the Easter results. Their handsome store looked quite bare on Monday.

Pennock Bros. handled an immense quantity of plants, azaleas and lilies being leaders. Something over 2,000 large plants were sold. They kept several clerks busy filling violet orders all day Saturday, and had to send back to their growers that night for more.

City Council.

Easter Monday saw the convening of the new city council, a somewhat smaller body than of yore, but none the less objects of the affectionate remembrances of their friends. Robert Crawford & Son decorated the select chamber with handsome flowering plants, also Beauties and lilies, while the Wm. Graham Co. perfumed the same office in the chamber of the lower branch. Both firms, besides many others, distributed handsome plants and bouquets on the members' desks to be afterwards delivered at their homes.

Notes.

M. Rice sailed for Europe last Thursday on the Deutschland. Mr. Rice is in search of the choicest products of the continent to add to the attractions of his firm's establishment.

Wm. K. Harris delighted the members of the Florists' Club with "The Mistakes I have Made in Floriculture" at the April meeting, last Tuesday evening.

George Huster, gardener at Girard College, has been ill at St. Joseph's Hospital.

A very large number of perennials have been killed by the severe winter.

Berger Brothers filled a nice order for thirty-six dozen Beauties on Easter Monday.

Double daffodils appeared to be the best sellers among the bulbous flowers at Easter.

Robert Scott & Son had a few very fine gardenias that were sold in pots.

No one need want for lilies for the next few weeks.

John Burton is sending fine Beauties to Leo Niessen.

PITTSBURG.

The Easter Trade.

I am safe in saying that Easter has again come up to all our anticipations; the general report is very satisfactory. The best grade of stock was most in demand. Much bulbous stock was left standing around, in fact tulips, daffodils, Paper White narcissi and hyacinths were not in demand at all; these flowers seem to be growing less in favor each year. Much of this stock gave evidence of having been held back. Carnations, roses and violets were good sale, in fact, roses and carnations were ordered in greater proportions than ever.

The scarcity of smilax and wood ferns created a big demand for asparagus. Lilies held their own, the supply was just about equal to the demand. Quite a number of large flowering plants are left on hand with every retailer; the demand for these large plants was not as good as in former years. The cut flower business was not affected this year as much as last by the blooming plants. This may be due to the reasonable prices asked by the wholesalers. The usual increase in prices on cut flowers for Easter was not as heavy as in former years.

Ernest Zieger, manager of C. T. Siebert's retail stands at Liberty Market, transformed that place into a flower garden. He reports Easter business very good.

The display of flowers and blooming plants made in the Allegheny Market by the florists was immense. E. C. Ludwig's big new stand was a regular flower show in itself, and business was rushing. G. & J. W. Ludwig report a very satisfactory business. Frank Falk's pretty stand was a perfect mass of flowers and he did a big business, too. F. Britenbaugh & Bro. had the finest Cardinal, Yellow Prince and Murillo tulips I saw this season, also daffodils, and all of their own forcing.

The cut of the Pittsburgh Rose & Carnation Co., was extraordinarily heavy and of exceedingly good quality last week.

B. L. Elliott had a fine cut of roses and carnations for his Easter shipments.

The Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. reports a very satisfactory Easter trade. Mr. Langhans says the demand for the better grades of roses and carnations is on the increase at holiday times.

The annual Easter flower show at the Phipps Conservatories is very fine this year. The show is attracting thousands of visitors from out of town places and the railroads put on a special train on Easter Sunday which they named the Floral Excursion.

"A carnation with every shine" was the wording of a placard, a progressive shoe shiner displayed on Easter Sunday in Allegheny.

Some very fine Kaiserins are now arriving from Fred Burki's Crystal farm greenhouses.

This week starts with a very encouraging vim; special activity in the matrimonial market is the cause.

Hoo-Hoo.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—During the recent flood John Calder succeeded in keeping heat in his greenhouses for a time by erecting an upright boiler on the sidewalk outside his place after the water had extinguished the fires in the boiler pit.

CHICAGO.The Easter Market

A review of the Easter market shows that stock came in heavily during the first days of the week and there was plenty of everything up to Thursday night. On Friday receipts were somewhat lighter, demand more brisk and prices stiffened perceptibly. On Saturday morning receipts were again heavy and shipping demand practically at an end and the market weakened, but local trade was heavy and everything was well cleaned out at noon. Those houses which had considerable receipts on Saturday afternoon found little doing and carried much of the stock over until Monday. But, taking it by and large, it was the most satisfactory Easter on record. Qualities were fine everywhere.

Going into the situation more in detail, it seems that the lilies were not the disturbing factor they have been in many years and this portion of the business was handled to better satisfaction than usual. The receipts were very well cleaned out, only a few poor flowers being left on hand. Prices ranged from 8 cents to 15 cents, according to the quality of the goods. If average prices may be considered, average goods brought about 12 cents.

As was expected, Beauties and red roses were short of requirements, but not so seriously short as was anticipated, because it was well understood that there would be a scarcity and buyers did not order largely in this department. Good roses sold out clean up to Saturday afternoon, but the market had many hundreds of choice stock to carry over Sunday. The grower who held back his stock until Saturday afternoon made a very serious mistake.

There was a tremendously heavy business in carnations, but in the majority of houses all orders were filled practically complete. The exceptions were some of the very large orders. As had been anticipated there was considerable low grade stock, which was difficult to move at any price, but in general the receipts averaged of excellent quality and moved out at probably the best average prices ever realized in this market for a week's business. The carnation growers certainly have no cause for complaint, even if there were moderate quantities left unsold Saturday noon.

There were unlimited quantities of bulbous stock all through the week and, although sales were large, there was at no time a demand which would warrant an advance over the prices which have prevailed all season. If there was any exception to this it was first-class tulips. Southern jonquils came in heavily and were sold in large quantities at very low prices.

The violets were one item which did not do much for Easter. Last year at Easter first-class goods made a very fine average, but sales were slow all the week and on Saturday afternoon the lower grades were jobbed off for practically what the buyers would give. There were hundreds of thousands of violets on hand on Saturday and only the cream of the stock made a presentable figure.

Not only are the wholesalers well satisfied with the outcome of Easter business, the general report being sales well in advance of any other year, but the retailers, too, are generally well pleased although there is scarcely one who did not have more or less material left on hand. The lilies in pots usually sold out but the down-town dealers seem to have had a little the best of the outside retailers in respect to cleaning up in the plant department. There were large azaleas left nearly everywhere, also more or less bulbous stock in pans, although very great quantities were used. Certainly the plant business was the heaviest ever known in Chicago. Many of the retailers remark on the lack of call for roses and nearly everyone had stock enough left to carry him through Monday and Tuesday of this week. A few had carnations left, but this was because they had bought a great deal more heavily than usual. Many of them had violets to spare but this is largely attributed to the fact that Sunday was very cold and unfavorable for transient sales.

Business has been dull this week. The country has been heard from regularly but usually in a small way and the requirements have made no appreciable impression on the supply. Values are ruling low now and it looks as though there would have to be a big increase in demand or we will get the spring glut in very short order after the plants recover from the close cutting for Easter.

The Reinberg Testimonial.

It was a splendid tribute to Peter Reinberg's integrity, ability and popularity which the voters of the twenty-sixth ward paid to the "carnation candidate" on Tuesday. In a ward nominally from 800 to 1,000 republican, where it is hard work to induce a democrat to make a campaign, Mr. Reinberg, the democrat, received 4,589 votes, within five of twice as many as his republican opponent. Mr. Reinberg made a unique campaign and attracted wide attention by the thoroughness of his canvass; his strongest adversaries early conceded him a chance of overcoming the republican majority, but not even his most sanguine friends anticipated so overwhelming a victory. It is whispered that the party managers are thinking that a carnation campaign with the same candidate might be a good thing to cover the whole city next spring.

INDIANAPOLIS.Easter Trade.

There was only one thing to prevent this from being the greatest Easter, as far as business goes, in the history of the trade here. All the growers and storemen had large stocks of fine stuff and the demand promised to be very heavy early in the week. But on Thursday night within a few hours almost three inches of rain fell and flooded this section of the state almost as deep as it did a week before. Street car service was stopped from Friday night until Saturday evening and people who usually depend on the street car could not get to the florists' places of business. Especially was this true with those who patronize the Tomlinson Hall flower market. Things looked blue until evening, when car service was resumed and a great rush of buyers took everything in sight.

The stores all report a great business, but a little inconvenience on account of the crippled car service. Sunday morning there was a great rush at the stores that cleaned them up nicely. There was a fine lot of stock both in blooming plants and cut flowers and prices did not soar as they do sometimes. Carnations took the lead in cut flowers and everything in sight was cleaned up. Many were shipped in, some of which were very fine, while a large part of them were only fit for the dump. While homegrown stock always gets the preference, it is this shipped stock that keeps the prices down. There are always those who think they must have about double what they can sell and are not willing to pay the price of good stock. One grower invested ~ 3,000 4-cent blooms and had to sell them out at 35 cents per dozen. Another department store received 8,000 blooms on Saturday and had practically no trade for them. It was impossible to wholesale them, as they were too trashy. The regular growers and storemen have no sympathy for them, but rather hope that they will learn a lesson after they "get stuck" a few more times. Those who were contented to dispose of their own stock at fair prices are all well pleased with their business, especially when they consider the obstacles to be overcome.

The Easter Market.

One more Easter has come and gone and growers, wholesalers and retailers are practically unanimous in pronouncing it the best on record. This is the more surprising when general trade conditions are considered, for business in some of our staple New England industries is not of the best; but one thing is certain, viz., that the Easter sales aggregated more than ever before and that growers and dealers, after the strenuous rush, are tired but contented mortals.

Plants are yearly coming more and more into evidence and the volume of business done in these reached tremendous proportions this year. On Saturday almost every other person met seemed to be carrying a plant of some description and florists' delivery wagons, ordinary express teams and other vehicles were loaded down with plants. Plants are yearly becoming more popular as Easter presents and those who had a good stock of varieties which took the popular fancy are well sold out.

Easter lilies were in decidedly short supply. The quality generally was quite good, although some showed by their limp appearance that they had been sweated into bloom. Boston clings to Lilium longiflorum and probably not one per cent of those sold were Harrisii. Prices averaged $15 per 100 buds and blooms. A few sold higher late on Saturday afternoon. E. N. Pierce & Co. and W. W. Edgar supplied the largest quantity and the quality was first class. At one time Lilium candidum was grown in considerable quantity for our market, but not a flower was seen this year. One florist who wanted a six-foot cross of it for a customer was unable to secure any.

Crimson Rambler roses, next to lilies, were in best demand. Plants which had been grown altogether in pots were vastly superior to fall-potted-up specimens, the trusses on the latter being only a fraction the size of the former. Yellow marguerites, Kalmia latifolia and Acacia armata seemed to take well. Azaleas, especially red and white, sold in large quantities. The increasing popularity of gardenias was evidenced by some of the retailers stocking up with some well-flowered plants of G. florida in 8 and 10-inch pots. E. McMulkin had a fine lot of ericas, including Cavendishiana, ventricosa magnifica, Wilmoreaana, persoluta alba, translucens and perspicua nana. These took well. Gemistas did not cut much of a figure this year and metrosideros was little called for. Nicely flowered varieties of prunus and pyrus, with Campbell violets growing in the tops of the pots, were in demand. Spiræas did not sell very well, the varieties grandiflora and astilboides taking the best. Hydrangeas were fewer than usual; blues seemed to sell the best.

Hybrid roses, English primroses, double violets, bulbous stock in variety, lily of the valley and rhododendrons were seen in quantity. A good deal of bulbous stock was, as usual, left over. Palms, araucarias and other foliage plants were only in very slight demand, although a good business was done loaning them to the numerous churches. Good Friday was a soaking wet day. Saturday fortunately was a good day for delivering plants. Sunday proved a typical March day, being cold and blustery; temperature until late in the evening was above freezing.

Saturday's cut flower market was well cleaned out at noon, some pink carnations, violets and bulbous stock being practically all that was left. In roses some extra fine Beauties came from Waban Conservatories and Elliott; 50 cents to 75 cents each seemed to be ruling prices for high grade stock, although some were said to have sold higher. Brides and Bridesmaids brought from $6 to $20 per 100, according to quality. Liberty and Meteor, as well as such hybrids as Jacq. and Brunner, sold well, prices varying from $10 to $50 per 100. Golden Gate, Ivory, Carnot and other sorts were offered in moderate quantities.

In carnations fancies brought from $6 to $8, good $4 to $5, and ordinary grades $3. Scarlet sold the best but Enchantress, Prosperity and extra good whites were in demand. Lawson shades were rather druggy. There was a fine lot of violets; it would seem as though the crop had been held up for a fortnight. Quite a number of doubles were still unsold in the market at 2 p. m. Extra good Princess of Wales brought $1 and Campbells 50 to 75 cents per 100. Valley sold for $3 to $6, the top quality being superb. In narcissi the large trumpet varieties like Horsfieldi and Emperor went well, as did Poeticus, but princeps and double Von Sion were in heavy oversupply at every street stall.

Extra fine Mont Blanc sweet peas sold at $1.50 to $2. Blanche Ferry was in less demand. Other flowers on sale included antirrhinum, Anemone fulgens, ranunculus, daisies, pansies, wallflowers, hardy primroses in variety, callas and a few orchids, such as Cattleya Ludde-manniana, Dendrobium nobile and Cœlogyne cristata.

Various Notes.

E. McMulkin had the daintiest Easter window of any of the retailers. It was a creation in white and included Easter lilies, ericas, gardenias, Cœlogyne cristata alba, sweet peas, lily of valley, Narcissus ornatus, antirrhinum, roses, carnations, orange trees and azaleas.

The Market.

The greatest flower day of the year has come and gone for another time, and it appears that this year it leaves most pleasant memories. Saturday was an ideal day, and thousands of people were on the streets. Sunday was not so good, though, as it was cloudy and cold, still it did not affect the sale of flowers greatly. There can be no question but that the trade was equal to last year and I believe that in most cases it was ahead. Then the supply of most kinds of stock was about equal to the demand. The storemen did not have the usual worry about filling late orders and everything went off very smoothly.

As is usual, there was salted stock in evidence, and some of it was pretty fierce and resulted in a loss to the grower. But taken as a whole the quality of the goods handled was very good. There was considerable bulbous stock left over, but that was due more to poor quality than lack of demand. Harrisii and calla lilies were fine and were in big demand. There was a heavy call for violets and not nearly enough to fill all orders. Carnations did fine and brought high prices. First grade roses were none too plentiful. Long stemmed Beauties were much in evidence and sold fairly well. They are not an Easter flower, however, and so they did not bring such high prices. Green goods were very scarce.

The Easter shipping trade was very good and some first-class stock was sent out. The shipping trade from this city is growing constantly and is bound to be a big factor some day.

At present trade is somewhat slow, as it usually is after a holiday, but we are having some fine weather, and it ought to bring forth some fine stock.

Various Notes.

John Evans is in the city. He is superintending the placing of a large number of his ventilating machines in the big factory buildings that are being erected at Norwood.

As is usual at Easter, the growers in the Jabez Elliott flower market did a rushing business Saturday. There was a continual crush of people from opening till closing time, and thousands of dollars' worth of flowers were sold. The market was a sight well worth going many miles to see, and one that is not equaled anywhere in the United States.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society will be held Saturday, April 9. There will be some special business to be disposed of.

eral years, a few palms being often the extent of the committee's work, contributions of plants by individuals making up the rest of the decoration. We don't miss that part of the business any, for where ten or fifteen years ago there was a pretty plant bought to brighten the home or, still oftener, to give to a friend, there are today at least 100. In another column I have spoken of the plants that were greatest in demand, so I need say no more, only to repeat that it seems each succeeding year that plants are the leading feature. There must have been an enormous quantity sold.

Flowers were plentiful. Carnations were of the finest quality and abundant, and you could buy mighty fine ones at $1 per dozen retail. That will compare very well with ten years ago, but is not as good as last year. There were plenty of roses also. American Beauty roses could be bought wholesale at $25 per 100, and there were more than enough. Valley sold fairly well because it is never raised in price. Bulbous stock is always a little slow at Easter. The flower that was decidedly the flower of the day was the sweet little violet, either double or single, but I suppose there were a thousand double to every hundred single. This man sold 20,000 another 25,000, and we can swear that one small firm sold 12,000, so I should say there must have been 150,000 violets sold on Saturday and Sunday. W. Ehman sent in from Corfu some 500 bunches of sweet peas and they all sold.

Those who look for a large demand from people visiting the different cemeteries on Easter Sunday, which is the case if the weather is mild and pleasant, were disappointed, for it was much too cold, and but few ventured out. The Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday were fine and bright. Friday came in dark and cool. On Saturday it was 3 or 4 degrees above the freezing point, with the wind blowing forty miles an hour. Flakes of snow went scudding along ten miles without alighting on the ground. It was the very worst kind of a day for delivering plants and necessitated the careful wrapping of every plant. Sunday was clear and cold. We are inclined to think that these unfortunate weather conditions were largely local and expect and hope to hear that in most localities the weather was all the florist could desire. With all our misfortunes in that way, it was a glorious Easter for us all and long may the dear public's fancy turn to a pretty plant or bunch of flowers for an Easter remembrance as they did this year.

IT is reported that 700 acres of Rocky Ford melons will be planted in the Yakima Valley in Washington this year. Enthusiasts say that within two years that district will produce more than the Rocky Ford district. It is asserted that the character of the land is just as good and that the quality of melons will equal if not surpass those grown at Rocky Ford.

A SIMPLE test of the vitality of any farm or garden seeds can be made as follows: Place 100 seeds, taken at random from the stock which is to be planted, on a dish of sand, cover from one-half to one inch with sand, moisten and keep in a warm place, until the sprouts appear. Care should be taken that the seeds are kept moist, but not too wet. It is advisable to make more than one test, and be guided by the average results. A test of this kind is more valuable than one in which the seeds are placed in blotting paper, for seeds may sprout on paper which do not have sufficient vitality to grow.

The liabilities were said to be about $150,000, and the assets, as a going concern, $134,197. The business was subsequently sold to Burnett Landreth, Jr., and Phillips Landreth, sons of Burnett Landreth, senior member of the old firm.

BEGONIA VERNON.

In reading over some back numbers of the REVIEW I ran across an item in Brother Scott's Seasonable Hints of January 5, 1899, stating that he had sown some seed of Begonia Vernon the August previous and that he was going to put five or six in 8-inch pans and expected them to be in full bloom for Easter. I would like to ask Brother Scott whether or not he got them in full bloom for Easter?

S. F. P.

Yes, they flowered and made nice pans. If I remember we did the same thing the following year, but we have so many pretty as well as showy plants for Easter that we let it drop.

CHICAGO, April 6.—Radishes, 25 to 65c dozen bunches; leaf lettuce, 45 to 47½c case; heads, $2 to $4 barrel; cucumbers, 50c to $1.25 dozen.

FERTILIZERS FOR CUCUMBERS.

What is the best commercial fertilizer for cucumbers? I intend to put it in with the seed. The soil is fine, wholly new land, only used once. It was plowed last fall. O. H.

I have always had good success in growing cucumbers by using tankage. This is manufactured at the slaughter houses. It contains bone, blood and the entrails of animals, these being kiln-dried and then ground fine. This contains a large percentage of phosphoric acid, which makes it quick acting. Instead of putting in the seed and manure together, I would advise O. H. to put the manure in the hills about a week before he intends sowing the seed. This will allow the heat of the manure to work off. If put in together the heat generated from the manure would be apt to injure the seeds, which in a good many cases would fail to germinate. We have no hard and fast rule regarding the exact quantity to be used but by the rule of thumb: use a good handful to each hill. W. S. CROYDON.

LATE CROPS.

I have twenty feet of a house, 30x100, which I wish to plant to some vegetable early in May that will come in early, or in time to bring good prices. Could I be successful with tomatoes? I could get the plants now and grow them on in pots until the benches are ready. I have solid beds and a very light house, the glass being two feet wide. Do you know where plants are to be bought? From what sowing of seed should they be? Would any other crop pay better? A. A. G.

The month of May is too late to plant any vegetable crop indoors with any degree of certainty of its bringing good prices. By the time the crop would be ready a plentiful supply of all kinds of vegetables would be coming in from warmer sections at no great distance further south than where you are located, and these would of course be grown at much less expense than indoor crops. Of course much would depend on your local market. Customers might be willing to pay more for a home-grown article than for one shipped from a distance. But such vegetables as tomatoes and cucumbers, which would be about the only crops worth considering for your purpose, are good shippers, and it is very doubtful if the home grown article would be so much superior as to induce the payment of a higher price. However, if you decide to try a vegetable crop I think tomatoes would be about your best crop. If you cannot procure the plants locally you can get them through the advertising columns of the REVIEW. Good strong plants in 5-inch pots would be large enough for planting. W. S. CROYDON.

THE TOMATO DISEASE.

This fungous diseases, or blight, as it is sometimes called, is too common to need description, as all those who have tried the forcing of tomatoes will have had more or less experience with it. Numerous remedies have been advocated for it, and many of them have afforded relief, but when the plants are seriously attacked I don't think there is anything that can be depended on as a cure.

By studying the conditions most conducive to the development of the disease and avoiding such conditions as far as possible much trouble may be prevented. Location has much to do with it; in low situations all fungous diseases are more prevalent than on higher and drier ground. In the house itself the atmosphere should be kept as dry as possible, watering being always done in the morning, to give the moisture a chance of drying up before the house has to be closed down. During dull, damp spells, when little air can be given, a correspondingly less supply of water will be needed by the plants and just enough should be given to keep them from suffering from excessive dryness. Light and air play a most important part in the prevention of this disease. If the plants are huddled together to the obstruction of both light and air it is hardly to be expected that they will remain in a healthy condition. Cold draughts and sudden changes of temperature are fruitful causes of the development of disease, so great care should be exercised in the matter of airing.

Being fortunate in having a good location, and by the observance of the above points, we have experienced very little trouble with the disease this season. Whenever the disease made its appearance, which is first indicated by brown spots on the under surfaces of the lower leaves, we removed the affected leaves at once and painted the pips in a few places with sulphur diluted in linseed oil. Thus we managed to hold it in check, though we know from former experience that this is not sufficient to arrest a serious attack. W. S. CROYDON.

THE West Michigan Nurseries, of Benton Harbor, Mich., have recently added a branch at Eau Claire, Wis., where they are doing a nice business.

A FRENCH scientist has demonstrated to his own satisfaction that trees in full foliage in May or June may be transplanted with little injury if the moving is done at night.

THE Aurora Nursery Co., Aurora, Ill., has been incorporated, with J. A. Young as manager. They have secured a tract of thirty acres which will be planted to nursery stock this spring.

TEXAS points report a frost on March 27. C. E. Stephens, proprietor of the Iron Ore Nursery, at Denison, Texas, and Wm. Munson, of the Munson Nursery, think little damage was done to small fruits.

J. A. TAYLOR, of Wynnewood, I. T., reports the nursery trade heavy this spring, the demand almost entirely for fruit trees. He thinks peaches have been little injured by late frosts, but apricots are practically annihilated.

APPLES from America landed at Liverpool during the period from August to the third week of December amounted to 1,200,000 barrels, as compared with 750,000 barrels received at that port during the same period of 1902.

DENVER, COLO.

The Easter Trade.

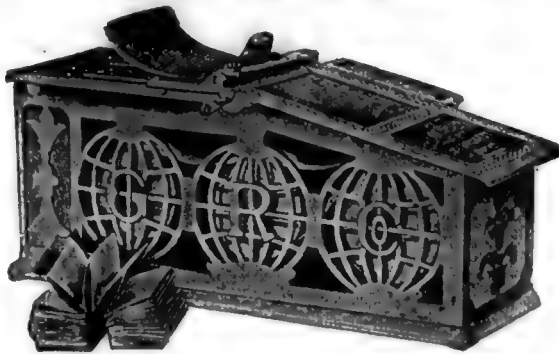

Easter week opened with very favorable conditions for a brisk trade, stock and weather being all that could be desired. Wednesday was considered by many of the retailers as a record breaker. Thursday brought bad weather and a complete check was put on the transient trade in the city stores. But the balance of the week was pleasant and stock was handled with considerable dispatch and little expense. The increase in business, which drifted largely into the plant department, will run twenty-five per cent above last year. This can be accounted for principally by the superior and diversified character of the plants put on the market, which were considered by all as the best ever seen in Denver. Prices advanced slightly above former years on everything excepting lilies, which were not of a first-class quality, and retailed at the uniform price of $3 per dozen. Tom Chapman, Ben Boldt and the Curtis Park Floral Co. had fairly good lilies, but much of the stock throughout the city was rather weak and stunted. Azaleas were exceptionally fine and brought good prices and in most instances were all sold out. The best specimens came from the Colfax Avenue Floral Co., which were Prof. Wolters, Van der Cruyssen, Niobe, etc. Crimson Ramblers were rather scarce, but what were to be obtained were good and sold readily. The best of those came from Boldt. The Colfax people had a nice lot of field-grown plants in 6 and 7-inch pots. Heretofore we have relied upon pot-grown stuff, but those plants showed that good marketable stock can be produced from field-grown plants of previous years.

The Park Floral Co. had an extensive collection of pot plants, which were well displayed in their down-town conservatories. Their hydrangeas were the best ever seen here, and many of them sold as high as $15, in 10-inch pots and tubs. Their best house plant and the most admired was the imported wistaria, which they used in a window decoration in connection with porcelain-colored hyacinths, lilies and spiraeas. This combination, under the rays of a lavender-colored electric light, was much admired.

The Scott Floral Co. handled a large lot of plants. Noticeable among them were some fine rhododendrons and genistas, the latter, contrary to previous experience, selling well, in fact sold out. Bulb stuff in pots and pans sold well, especially those ranging in price from $1 to $2 each. Mauff had the cream of this stock, noticeably in tulips, such as Proserpine, Keizerskroon and Murillo, the latter a beautiful rose color and as big as an ordinary peony.

While all well-grown stock sold for good prices, it is a noticeable fact that there is an increasing demand for a cheaper character of plants in 4 and 5-inch pots, such as heliotrope, mignonette, violets and Dutch hyacinths. I know only one retailer who cares about handling this line of goods at holiday times, but he makes the purchasers take them with them and thus avoids the extra expense attached to delivery. Some of the growers who are also retailers, rather than spend time selling a 25-cent hyacinth, put three or four in a 5-inch pot garnished with small ferns or asparagus and found ready sale for them at an increased rate of profit.

The cut flower department was well supplied, and while the sale was quite brisk there was little if any advance in prices. Beauties were scarce, but Glauber's Chatenays filled up a big gap left by their absence. These retailed at $5 per dozen, while good Brides and Maids brought $3. Ordinary carnations brought $1 and fancy $1.50 per dozen.

Violets ran out and many orders had to be cut short. Cut tulips and narcissi sold better than heretofore, the double tulips at $1.50 per dozen and single at $1. In narcissi the best seller was Bicolor Empress and Emperor, both much larger than Golden Spur and longer and stouter stems. Valley was good and sold at $1 per dozen. Many of the growers have given up growing Romans, as they claim there is no money in them, the cost of bulbs is so high.

THE REVIEW is a ray of light, a morning sun to the progressive florist.—J. R. ELDER, Sioux City, Iowa.

The FLORISTS' MANUAL

WILLIAM SCOTT

Price, $5.00 Carriage Prepaid.

Florists' Publishing Co.,

Is a book of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review), and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopaedia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO SPRING SHOW.

The spring exhibition of the California State Floral Society took place last week in the grand nave of the ferry building. The attendance, despite the miserable weather, was good.

Not one of our San Francisco florists exhibited and the reason therefor I will explain. Some weeks ago, when the Retail Florists' Association succeeded in getting the peddlers off the streets, a great hue and cry was raised, backed up by one of the city papers, the consequence being that the motley crowd of Italians ply their vocation as before. The fact that the California State Floral Society as a body countenanced the action of the city officials in the matter was a bitter pill for the florists, many of whom are members of the society. Consequently when the ladies who had the present fair in charge called on the florists, who have always donated stock and time to make the show something for San Franciscans to be proud of, their appeals were in vain.

Nevertheless our largest private places and big nurseries exhibited largely and made the show a success, with beautiful displays of bulbous and hardy flowers. The Cox Seed Co. made a splendid showing of greenhouse and hardy plants in pots and had the largest exhibit in the hall. It was in charge of John Vallance, manager of the plant department. The California Nursery Co., of Niles, also made a good showing of flowering shrubs and took several first prizes. Golden Gate Park exhibited a general collection of shrubs and hardy stock that was much admired. The Vawter Carnation Co., of Los Angeles, made a good showing with outdoor-grown carnations in a half dozen varieties. The most admired collection was the display of the Leedham Bulb Co., of Santa Cruz. This firm showed magnificent bunches of daffodils and narcissi. A. J. Pope, of Burlingame, Wm. Kittlewell, gardener, made a good showing of bulbous stock, and E. Knoch exhibited some fancy florists' baskets of his own manufacture. Otto F. Niedermuller had several plans of elaborate country places.

The balance of the exhibits were from private parties and consisted principally of wild flowers and bulbous stock.

The next show will be the regular spring exhibition of the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society, May 12 to 14. A large list of premiums is offered and as there are no strained relations between the retailers and the other members of this order, I expect to see a big turnout of the craft. G.

COAST EXPERIMENT STATION.

The United States Department of Agriculture has decided to establish a plant introduction garden and experiment station at Chico, Cal. Contracts for the necessary land have been closed and work has been begun on what will undoubtedly be the greatest institution of its kind in America and perhaps in the world. A beginning will be made with ninety acres, but it is the intention of the department to extend the area as the needs of the institution require. The garden will be devoted to experimental culture of the plants introduced from various parts of the world and to a careful study of plant life.

Such an institution has long been contemplated by the Agricultural Department. California was selected for its location on account of climatic conditions which admit of the culture of tender plants from the tropics and of northern products as well. The ideal location for such an institution is that which admits of the successful cultivation of the widest possible range of products and the commission entrusted with the duty of selecting the site believe they have found it at Chico.

This commission was composed of Prof. P. H. Dorsett, government expert, who will have charge of the institution, and Prof. A. V. Stubenrauch, of the University of California. They spent months in making a careful study of conditions affecting plant life in various portions of the state, visiting and carefully inspecting each locality likely to prove available. The decision in favor of Chico was reached some time ago, but the site selected could not be secured and another tract had to be chosen, which has now been done and the purchase consummated.

Chico is situated near the eastern border of the great Sacramento valley, seventy-five miles north of Sacramento, the state capital, and was the most northerly point considered by the commission. Climatic conditions in California are affected but little if at all by conditions of latitude.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

For a wonder the rain ceased long enough to give prospects of a bright day for Easter. The complaint is general that there is not as much shipping to interior parts of the state as is usually done at this season. The great abundance of callas has considerable to do with that, as never have they been so plentiful. The price today is 50 cents to $1 per hundred, and millions to be had. They are relied on for church decorating and during unfavorable years there is much demand for them in country towns. All the retail stores are piled high with blooms and greens of all descriptions. There has been practically nothing doing for the past week and stocks have accumulated wonderfully. Easter lilies are plentiful and of good quality. The cut stems sell April 1 at from $1.50 to $3 per dozen and pot plants $6 to $9 per dozen. Roses are still scarce, except Bridesmaid. Carnations are in fair supply. Valley is plentiful at $4 per hundred. White irises and fruit blooms are being used in great quantities for decorating.

Notes.

John Cook, of Berkeley, has sold the property on which his greenhouses were situated, but still retains a portion on Addison street. He received $40,000 and it is the intention of the new owners to erect stores and offices on the ground.

A visit to E. W. McLellan, at Burlingame, shows his range of glass consisting of 80,000 feet in good shape for Easter. He has six houses planted to Bridesmaid, of which he makes a specialty, and the houses are a mass of bloom at this time. Two houses are devoted to Beauty and are being dried off at present. Three houses are kept for Meteor, and although they are now off crop the stock looks well. Five houses are occupied by carnations, including the usual varieties, and two houses of ferns complete the list. Mr. McLellan has one of the most extensive greenhouse plants in California and his place well repays a visit.

About half a mile west of these grounds is the establishment of P. C. Meyer. Although started less than a year ago Mr. Meyer has made such rapid progress that he has now about 75,000 feet of glass fully planted to Beauties, Liberty, Bride and Maid, and Estelle, Lawson and Prosperity and Hill carnations. His houses are thoroughly up to date and his stock looks remarkably well. Thos. Breen has charge of the houses and they are splendid testimonials for his ability in growing first-class stock. G.

If you want large plants you can sow at once. If sown now it will be settled, warm weather before the plants are large enough to plant out, but don't plant out till all danger of the slightest frost is gone. If given a very rich, light soil they are inclined to grow rank and not as well flowered, so choose a light soil, but not too rich, and you will have a most compact and better-berried plant.

For the negligent killing of Thomas F. TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held Tuesday evening, March 29, President James Ballantyne in the chair. The principal business of the evening was the schedule of prizes for the November exhibition and a few small classes were added to enable the small grower to compete.

It was moved that a letter of thanks be tendered to the donors of the following special prizes for the fall exhibition: Silver cup for best twelve blooms Dr. Enguehard chrysanthemum, by the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown; $25 for best arranged table of foliage plants, $15 for first prize and $10 for second, by Mrs. H. Walter Webb, Scarborough; $20 for best twelve blooms chrysanthemum distinct varieties, $12 for first prize and $8 for second, by John D. Archbold, Tarrytown; $10 for best twelve blooms chrysanthemums, four varieties, three of each, $6 for first prize and $4 for second, by President Ballantyne.

There was a beautiful display of bulbous flowers at this meeting, for which President Ballantyne was awarded James Smith's prize of a pair of cuff buttons. Joseph Mooney, of Hastings-on-Hudson, was awarded a certificate of merit for an exceptionally fine display of Lilium Harrisii, and D. MacFarlane received honorable mention for a vase of white Antirrhinum majus. H. Nichols, of Yonkers, and C. Wilson, of Dobbs Ferry, were the judges. Some very lively discussions on the growing of bulbs followed and were very interesting to the members.

At the April meeting President Ballantyne offers a fountain pen as a prize for the best two plants of calceolaria. It was decided that after the April meeting the monthly prizes for the entire season shall be awarded for the best display of flowers cut from hardy shrubs.

The members were very much pleased to see their very popular member, Robert Angus, among them again. T. A. L.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Everyone seems to be well satisfied with the Easter business. With scarcely any exception the plant business of Toronto far exceeded the cutflower business, and it seems plants are increasing in demand for Easter. Those who increased on their last year's business did so in plants, while some admitted that their cutflower business was not as large as last year. What promised to be an over-supply of Easter lilies a week ago, materialized in the form of a shortage on the last day, the principal reason being that many of the out-of-town growers who had 200 or 300 plants for their own trade did not get them in, consequently the whole demand fell on the few that had. Many of the retail men who had been led to believe that there was going to be an overplus of lilies and that they could be purchased cheap the last few days, were sadly disappointed, and the fact was that many of them could not buy lilies Friday or Saturday at any price. All kinds of bulbous stock was plentiful; in fact more than enough to go around. Carnations seemed to be quite equal to the demand and some of the poorer stock was left looking for a buyer. Good roses were scarce and everything was pretty well cleaned up. In plants the principal thing noticed as being unsold was rhododendrons.

I think it is quite safe to say that all Toronto florists increased on last year's business, which is quite encouraging.

D. J.

UTICA, N. Y.—E. T. McQuivey had a down-town store for Easter week and did a big business.

BENTON HARBOR, MICH.—A. E. Crooks had a fine stock for Easter, particularly lilies, and reports good business.

NEW ROSES

Cardinal and Enchantress

Read testimonials from two of the largest growers in Washington who have bought a large number of plants after seeing them growing at my place.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1904.

Your new rose Cardinal came duly to hand and we firmly believe it will have a great future, and will certainly be a money maker as it is in a class all to itself, being superior in form and habit to anything that we have as yet seen. Your new rose Enchantress we also think will be a great money maker, judging from its profuse blooming quality, as we have seen it several times in mid-winter. It cannot help being a winner. Wishing you ever success, we remain,

Yours truly, A. GUDE & BRO.

American Rose Co., 909 F St., N. W., WASHINGTON, March 17, 1904.

DEAR SIR: We gave all the show possible to Enchantress and Cardinal, placing them in our window with placards telling what they were. They kept a week, retaining their brilliant color to the last. Cardinal was as full of perfume the day its petals dropped as when it was first cut. The roses are both matchless, and we believe destined to outclass all roses of their color for forcing under glass.

Very sincerely yours,

Easter Notes.

Easter trade was up to the best expectations of the growers, sufficient quantity of nearly everything being available. Beauties and other roses were plentiful and of a high grade. Carnations were abundant and of a fair quality. Wholesale prices ruled much the same as Chicago quotations. Retail prices were for ordinary stock about the same as usual at Easter times. Special grades commanded good prices.

Lilies, which were plentiful, were of various qualities, some first-class, while a portion were poor in quality. The best retailed at 20 cents per bloom and bud, the poorer quality being hard to sell. The supply of green such as smilax, asparagus, etc., was sufficient to cover all demands.

Pot plants, such as azaleas spiræas, rhododendrons, etc., commanded a ready sale, especially the smaller plants. There was a good supply of bulbous stock, which was cleaned up early.

The Dunkley Floral Co. had a fine stock of lilies. Their carnations, which were in full crop, gave them an abundance to supply their numerous customers.

Sam Batson also had a fine cut of carnations and, as he confines himself to this one thing, he invariably does them well.

The Central Michigan Nursery Co. had a good display of rhododendrons, lilacs, azaleas and other flowering shrubs.

G. Van Bochove & Bro., although being handicapped by being flooded, made a magnificent showing, their Beauties and other roses being superb. They also had an abundance of high grade carnations, lilies, callas, and other supplies, which were well cleaned up. Notwithstanding their misfortune they reckon this as being one of their best Easters.

The weather was mild, which made delivery a pleasure. RIBES.

PIPING.

My plan for piping a greenhouse is the uphill system for hot water, but there is a party here who argues that this is wrong and wants me to pipe it with all the pipes running down hill. Which is right?
E. R. T.

Both the up hill and down hill systems are in use for hot water heating. The up hill system, i. e., an arrangement which makes the highest point in the riser at the most distant point in the system, is most commonly employed. It is a slightly more efficient system than the other, as it places a heavier column of water upon the boiler and at the same time causes the water to become somewhat hotter, especially at the far end of the run than in the down hill system.
L. C. C.

MIGNONETTE.

A. Hemsley, writing in the Gardeners' Chronicle, says that mignonette when well grown is one of the continuously salable market plants. Machet is now the general favorite for pot culture, and some growers also use this for providing flowers for cutting; but he has found Vilmorin's Grandiflora more satisfactory for planting out, the spikes being close and compact and very sweet-scented. It is not always that the true varieties can be obtained. Most growers select and save their own seed, but when buying it will pay better to get seed from the most reliable source, even if the price is much higher.

BRUNNER, Tex.—T. F. Hudson, proprietor of the Bryn Mawr Nursery, reports trade increasing to such an extent that additional facilities will be required and is erecting two new greenhouses 24x140, with steam heat. He will grow carnations and roses in them.

WORLD'S FAIR FLOWER SHOWS.

In the series of flower shows to be held at the St. Louis World's Fair all sufficiently meritorious displays will receive a reward. The first will be a diploma, the next a bronze medal, the next a silver medal, and the highest a gold medal.

Suitable vases will be furnished by the Exposition management and exhibits will be properly staged where exhibitors do not personally attend. Judges will be chosen from the most eminent specialists for the respective displays.

All exhibits must be correctly and legibly labeled. Exhibits must be prepaid to the exposition grounds. The superintendent will be empowered to remove any exhibit that is no longer attractive.

A business card not to exceed 9x6 inches may be displayed with each exhibit.

The first of these flower shows is to be of carnations, May 1 to 8. The classes are as follows:

- Class 1, Vase 50 blooms Red.
- Class 2, Vase 50 blooms White.
- Class 3, Vase 50 blooms Pink (Light).
- Class 4, Vase 50 blooms Pink (Dark).
- Class 5, Vase 50 blooms Crimson.
- Class 6, Vase 50 blooms Yellow ground, variegated.
- Class 7, Vase 50 blooms White ground, variegated.
- Class 8, Vase 25 blooms, varieties introduced in 1900 and 1901.
- Class 9, Vase 100 blooms, not less than 5 varieties, arranged for effect.
- Class 10, General display of blooms, any variety or quantity.

Entries must be received by superintendent not later than April 27. Entries must be in place not later than noon of the opening day. Any exhibit in one class will not be considered as competing for award in other classes.

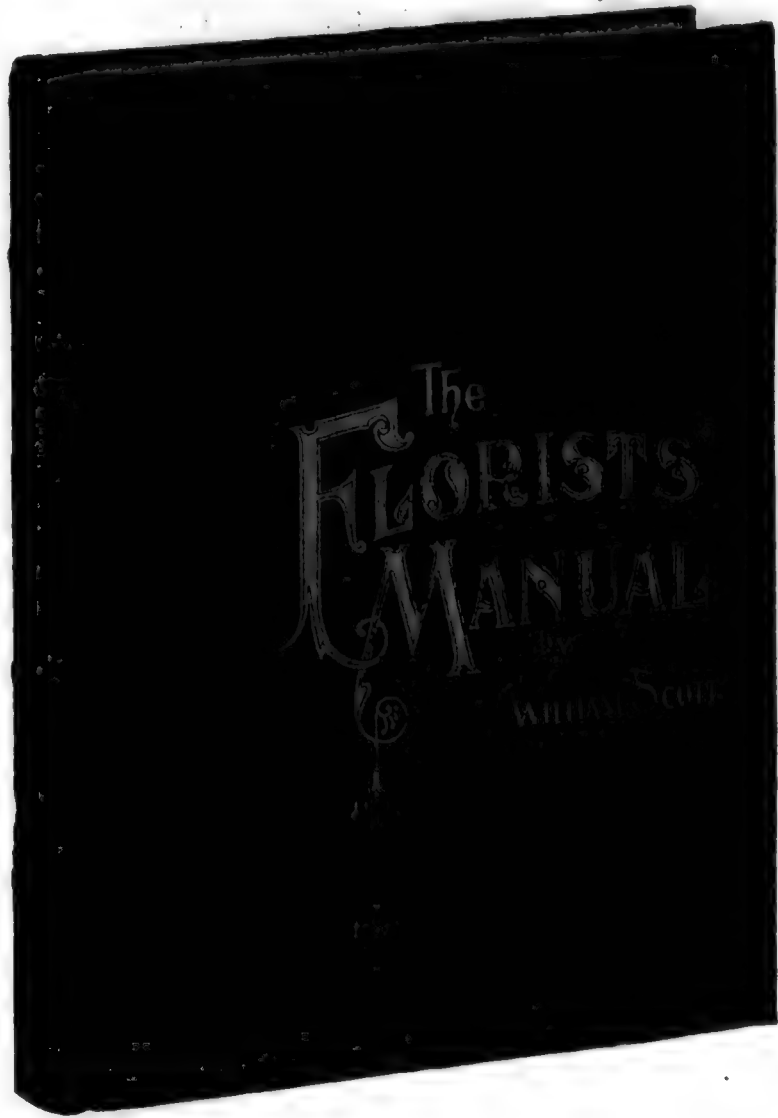

EVERLASTING FLOWERS.

In judging on everlasting flowers (dried) would grasses properly be classed as everlastings? If not would they disqualify the bouquet containing them from competition?
SIGMA.

The term "everlasting" is generally associated with such flowers as helichrysum, statice, gnaphalium, etc. These flowers need no special treatment to enable them to keep for years. They, with a few other so-called everlastings, are bleached and dyed in various colors, but that does not make them any more everlasting. The pampas grass plumes, or any of our nature grasses that will keep naturally without any artificial preparation, are as much everlasting flowers as any of them and most decidedly can be used in a bouquet for competition where a premium is offered for everlastings. A bouquet of everlasting flowers without grasses, if restricted to our native everlastings, would be very scant. What I mean by artificial preparation would be such as fern fronds preserved, because they are not naturally lasting unless preserved between paper or by cold storage, etc., and that would not do. But any flower that keeps naturally in good condition when dry is classed as an everlasting flower.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.
"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers. No effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettig.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The weather was cold, raw and miserable with two inches of snow Saturday morning, but cleared off about 10 o'clock and with bright sunshine made a fine day for the florists.

Carnations were in great demand and were remarkably scarce. When Saturday morning came no flowers were obtainable to fill shipping orders. Roses were also scarce. While there was plenty of bulbous stock, a great deal was spoiled by being encased in ice and taking too long to get out. Many batches of hydrangeas, spiraea, lilacs and Ramblers missed Easter. Lilies landed just about right and were of fine quality and sold well. Violets were plentiful and popular. In plants the lily, of course, led, with azaleas and rose bushes next. Spiraea, deutzias and Ramblers were everywhere in evidence; enough to supply all demands. Had it not been for floods and a series of calamities that befell the city, business would have been better, but as it was it was equal to that of last year and very satisfactory. G. F. C.

POMONA, N. C.

Easter trade this year was the best we have ever had. Everything sold out clean. Good demand in all lines, but most noticeable for violets and carnations, also valley. More calls for flowering plants in pots than we ever had. Easter lilies were the only thing not so much wanted. There is a new custom in this part of the country, very much to be commended, the placing of flowers and funeral designs on the graves of relatives and friends on Easter Sunday. Through this custom we cleaned up all our short-stemmed flowers and other things not suitable for other purposes. The weather was ideal for the season, and no doubt it helped out a lot to make the sales greater than we ever had before. We have been visited by a few frosts here, but not enough to injure the fruit, which is now in full bloom.

YORK CITY, PA.—C. E. Smith reports this the best Easter on record, with demand considerably in excess of last year, but plenty good stock on hand. Casper Henkel also reports a good business. He inaugurated the Easter season with a reception on Tuesday, which attracted a large number of visitors.

Princess of Wales

THE MOST VALUABLE VIOLET TO GROW.....

WHILE DOUBLE VIOLETS have been "dumped" in the leading cities, good singles have been bringing good returns to the grower. The popularity of this Violet is astonishing. I have sold in the city of Boston this winter 1,300,000 blooms without having to make any sacrifice. You can do the same if you have good stock. You cannot afford to have poor stock. I have simply the best stock in the country. I will send out in May strong, transplanted stock for which I am now booking orders at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000. 500 at 1000 rate.

WILLIAM SIM, Cliftondale, Mass.
Largest Grower of Violets in America.

AFTER - EASTER BARGAINS!

After Easter all Florists need to replenish their stock. We here offer some exceptionally fine bargains. If you cannot take care of your needs now, you had better place your order and have us hold same for you until you can use the plants. In this way you are sure of having your stock secured when you need it, and avoid the usual disappointment of "Stock sold" when you need it.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Guaranteeing Hardy Stock.

Many florists have to dabble a little in herbaceous plants, shrubs and ornamental trees, and it is not a bad business, either, for there is a liberal margin between the price at which you can buy them from a reputable nurseryman and what you are justified in charging your customer. I believe it is a good plan, in the case of herbaceous plants and deciduous shrubs, to sell them with a guarantee that they will live providing you plant them. You will get a better price, your customer will know that you will be anxious to do your best and you need not lose one per cent. With the nursery sizes of deciduous trees of the ordinary kinds, such as elms, poplars, lindens, chestnuts, maples, etc., you can do the same.

But there are a few fine trees you cannot guarantee to live and grow, notably the salisburia (maidenhair tree) and the tulip tree. Not that there is any difficulty in getting these trees to grow, but there is a difficulty in getting them in the right condition to transplant. If a nurseryman transplanted a young salisburia when it was three or four feet high, root pruned it and you bought it the following year, yes, or even in two or three years, when it was eight or nine feet high, you could plant it on your patron's lawn with all the confidence that you shift a geranium from a 3-inch to a 4-inch pot. But if the nurseryman planted his nursery row of salisburias when they were six inches high and never moved them till they were eight feet high, then it would need great care in digging and a like amount of care in transplanting and nursing to keep it alive in its new position, simply because in digging it you could get but few, if any, working roots.

The same can be said about the so-called evergreens. You can't afford to guarantee their living; you can only do your best, just for the same reason, that too many nurserymen leave their Norway spruces or Austrian pines growing too many years without a move. Things are, however, improving in this line. Transplanting is labor, the greatest expense item of the nurseryman, yet many are transplanting, and they have to charge for their trees and evergreens more than the careless firm. So when buying those things which your customer wants for a permanent adornment to his home, the first cost should not be considered. Don't put yourself in the place of the tree peddler who never desires to see a customer the second time on this earth.

Herbaceous Plants.

As soon as the ground can be dug is the time to plant or divide and transplant all of them. As their name implies they are hibernating during winter and before the warm days of spring start them into growth the less will they feel the loss of roots when moving. As all or nearly all the herbaceous plants are perennials and necessarily remain in one spot for several, perhaps many, years, it follows that whether for your own cultivation or for your customer's hardy garden the ground should be dug deep and well enriched.

I must admit that there are few of the well-known herbaceous plants that are profitable for our cut flower trade. But there are a few and of these the peony stands, of course, first. Short as its season is, it is gorgeous for a few weeks. The wonderful varieties of Delphinium formosum are fine, even if it is only to decorate your store windows in midsummer. Pyrethrum roseum is a great favorite with cut flower buyers and, both in form and variety of color, there are now some wonderful varieties. The smaller-flowered, single helianthus are useful, and so is the little, low-growing, white Achillea. The Pearl. Coreopsis lanceolata is a florists' flower and so is the fall-flowering Anemone japonica and the variety Whirlwind. Fine plant as the hardy herbaceous phlox is for a border, we never found any use for it when cut; it drops too quickly. I think it would pay us all to have a good planting of Tritoma Pfitzeri. Remember this is a great improvement over the old T. uvaria. The former flowers continuously till frost cuts it off.

The above few are only a fraction of the many plants of this class that you year's growth when transplanting. If you don't the sap, which is not overplentiful after transplanting, will seek the ends of the growths, eyes lower down will not break and you will always have a scrawny, naked bush. Don't think you lose anything by pruning hard when planting; before fall you will have a bigger and an infinitely better shaped plant than if you had not pruned it. One of the great mistakes you see constantly made by people planting a privet hedge, is that they will plant good young stuff, perhaps thirty inches high and then cut them back to fifteen or eighteen inches. Cut them back to six inches and you will have laid the foundation for a hedge worthy of the name.

Hybrid perpetual roses can be classed as flowering shrubs for the purpose I am writing about and many thousands of these will be planted this spring, only to be disappointing. Like the privet hedge, they should be cut back to within a few inches of the ground. Then you will get a strong, vigorous growth and even some flowers this summer. If pruned back next spring, allowing three or four eyes on the previous summer's growth, you will get fine roses and lots of them. Too many planters just dig a hole for the roots of their shrubs or roses and fill in with the dry soil, trusting to a rain "soon" to settle the soil around the roots and start them into growth. If you want success, that is not the way to get it.

I have often said there is only one way to plant an oak, a rose or a geranium, and I have seen no reason to alter my opinion, particularly with a tree or shrub. Remember it takes a copious rain to go down four or five inches, much less may be asked to supply your customer. Those people whose refined tastes will admire the many interesting herbaceous plants will not expect a show of bloom at all times, but an interesting succession throughout the season.

Hardy Flowering Shrubs.

These, like the herbaceous plants, should be planted just as soon as the ground is dry and workable. There is a good deal to say about pruning shrubs, a little of which I will say later, but never mind what species they are, or how ever well rooted they may be, don't fail to shorten back at least a third of last a foot, and perhaps you will not for a while get a shower. Dig the hole for the roots plenty big enough, particularly broad enough. Put in enough soil to cover the roots and steady the rose, or shrub, or tree in position, then soak it with water and, when that has disappeared, fill up the excavation with the soil you have dug out. That watering is worth forty on the surface.

I remember last spring receiving 500 H. P. roses from an eastern firm. They were good plants but dug up in Holland in the fall of 1902, wintered in a root house and part of March and April laid in by the heels, till near the end of April we found time to plant them. They were planted properly and cut back hard and not five out of the lot but what grew, and grew strongly. I merely mention this to say that had they been planted as too often they are, not five per cent would have lived.

Pruning Hardy Shrubs.

It may seem a little late to give advice regarding pruning shrubs, but it is not. Any time before they start into growth will do and many shrubs should not be pruned till they have flowered. It's a common occurrence to have a dear

ROSES.

The Rose Midge.

The very interesting article by F. M. Webster which appeared in last week's issue of the REVIEW, giving a description of the latest rose pest, must certainly be of the utmost interest to rose growers in all sections of the country as, if it is like other pests, it is certain to spread, and progressive growers would do well to secure the bulletin describing its habits, etc., so far as at present known, as early as possible. As yet I am thankful that I have had no personal experience with was unable to gather very many facts concerning it and the natural desire to keep such reports from spreading made reticence necessary.

However, now that the report is free to growers for the asking, they ought to take full advantage of it, so that they may be equipped with the best knowledge available.

So long as the means of destroying this pest remains unknown it will continue to be the most serious menace to rose growing that we have yet experienced in this country. I have little doubt that if it continues to spread some one of our brainy growers, aided by the scientists, will eventually hit upon a remedy. Every successful fight and the means employed should be duly reported for the benefit of the craft.

Having had some experience with the British species which attacks the leaf buds, I herewith give the remedies employed which seemed the most successful:

Syringing with Gishurst's Compound, using one-fourth pound to each gallon of water, certainly had the effect of diminishing the numbers. Syringing with kerosene emulsion had about the same effect. I tried tobacco in nearly all of its forms without effect and finally had to resort to hand picking. Whether this was the most effective remedy I am not sure, but they did not reappear the following season. I may state, however, that a near neighbor who also had an attack and used none of these remedies with the exception of tobacco smoke was also relieved of their presence the same season.

The bulletin will be of great use in enabling us to identify this pest if it does pay us a visit, which I hope it may not.

RIBES.

SOIL FOR ROSES.

In their work on soils Messrs. A. F. Woods and R. E. B. McKenney, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, have found that a great variety of soils can be successfully used for forcing roses, but a moderately heavy loam from rotted turf sods is gen-woman tell us that "a man came around last spring and pruned her shrubs and very few flowered." How could a lilac or viburnum flower if all the shoots that held the flower buds were cut off?

You want, broadly, to distinguish those shrubs that form their flower buds the previous summer, and have only to expand their petals the next spring, from those which make a growth of leaf and wood and terminate with a flower. To the former class belong all our hardy fruit trees. Before a leaf is visible are they not a bank or cloud of blossom? Among the familiar flowering shrubs of this class is the lilac, viburnum, pyrus, tamarix, prunus, forsythia and others. Now, if you prune these hard in the spring, or before flowering, it is evident you won't get any flowers, but just as soon as they are out of flower they should be pruned. To the latter class, or those that need pruning before flowering, belong Hydrangea paniculata, althæa, the hybrid perpetual roses, etc. A little observation will soon teach you which is which.

You frequently see some trusting patron of a tree peddler receiving a few evergreens, or Austrian pine, or Norway spruce, or retinospora along with their pear tree and raspberry bushes in early spring, or as soon as the nurseryman can dig. This is all wrong. Evergreens should not be moved till the middle of May, but this is a country of such wide latitudes that an arbitrary date is a poor guide. Just when they start to make their spring growth is the time to transplant an evergreen, and not before.

it, but I have seen the result of its depredations.

A particular friend of mine, an extensive grower whose Meteors have long been noted for their excellence, had just previous to my visit to his place last fall thrown out his entire crop of this variety owing to this pest. The investigation at that time not being complete, I erally recommended. The lighter types of soil are most favorable for such varieties as La France, Perle des Jardins, Duchess of Albany and Niphetos; while a good stiff loamy soil is required for Bride, Mermet, Madame Hoste, Gontier and Souvenir de Wootton. If the right type of soil cannot be found, light and heavy soils can be mixed to secure a soil of the desired texture. Assuming, however, that the proper sod loam can be obtained, cut the sods in the autumn, and compost with cow or horse manure, using one part of manure to three parts of soil. Turn and mix the heap two or three times during the winter, breaking up all lumps and getting into good, even condition. At the last turning, which should be made several weeks before the compost is to be used, add ten to fifteen pounds of fine ground bone, free from common salt, to each cubic yard of compost. This should be thoroughly mixed. Fine ground steamed bone is best for greenhouse use, as it decays more quickly than raw bone, and its phosphoric acid thus becomes available earlier. If raw, coarse bone is used, only a small part of the phosphoric acid becomes available during the first season, but the nitrogen content of the bone manure is a little higher.

It is also safe and desirable in the case of roses to add to the bone manure some form of potash, especially in the lighter classes of soil. We see from analyses that potash bears a very important relation to the formation and to the storing up of the other chemical constituents in the plant.

About one pound of sulphate of potash or six quarts of pure wood ashes to the cubic yard, applied with the ground bone, will be sufficient for the compost, which must not be too rich to start with, or the roots of the young plants will be injured. After the roses get a good start, and the soil is filled with fibrous roots, additional food will be required. The compost prepared as stated is adapted for plants from 3-inch or 4-inch pots.

The potting soil used for the plants up to the time they are ready for the beds should be very thoroughly rotted sod soil, as described above, mixed with one-sixth to one-eighth thoroughly rotted cow manure or horse manure, but with no bone or so-called chemical fertilizers.

It is considered best, if possible, to sterilize the potting soil with steam from a high-pressure boiler. This will destroy the plant and animal parasites likely to injure the young plants, so that they will usually be able to take care of themselves when set from the pots to the beds.

Some of the most successful growers also sterilize their compost for the beds. If this is properly done it destroys all nematodes (eel-worms), grubs, and all plant and animal parasites likely to attack the roots, as well as all weed seeds. In large establishments, at least, it will certainly pay to sterilize all soil used, especially where nematodes or other root parasites occur.

WOOD ASHES.

In potting rooted coleus and other soft cuttings I used dirt in which unleached wood ashes were mixed. Could this be the cause of so many of them dying?

F. J. U.

Unless the wood ashes were used in too large a quantity I cannot account for your losing any rooted cuttings of such a free growing, free rooting plant as coleus, except from one cause, viz., want of heat. Don't use wood ashes with any such plant; a good loam with a fourth of well-rotted manure is all you want. If you want them to jump extra fast, then a quart of bone flour to a bushel of soil will do it, but these soft-wooded plants are better in every way, and do better when planted out, when not overforced with any stimulant.

I want to tell F. J. U. not to call soil, or earth, if you please, "dirt." Florists don't deal in dirt and no such thing should be on his place. "Dirt" is matter out of place. It is sometimes seen in people's ears, sometimes under a greenhouse bench, or in the back yard. Some broken glass, some broken crocks, a few dead plants and a good sprinkling of soil all mixed together, that is dirt. The rich, brown earth that we use for potting our plants and from which all our sustenance springs, is good, sweet earth and it's awful to hear it degraded by the name of "dirt." W. S.

CALLA DISEASE.

In your issue of March 31, page 1016, under caption "Preservation of Hen Manure," I saw that hen manure contains a very large percentage of nitrogen. Could this be a cause to aggravate the calla disease? In the latter part of the winter I watered them with a very weak liquid of hen manure. The callas died fast in consequence. F. J. U.

If F. J. U. used the liquid manure very weak, as he says, then I don't believe it would aggravate the disease. This chicken manure is a very strong article, but using it as a liquid is the safest way. While you may use a bushel of cow manure in fifty gallons of water without harming anything, a 6-inch pot of the hen manure in fifty gallons of water would be strong enough. I am glad to say that I have not yet seen the calla disease, and was inclined to think that it was not a specific disease, simply mismanagement, but, alas, I learn from good authorities that it is a disease, and a bad one where it has appeared.

Just let me say, why do you want to use this strong stimulant on such a free growing plant as the calla? If quantity of flowers of a useful size are wanted, liquid manure will not help unless the plants are starved at the roots. If planted on a bench in five or six inches of soil, which is deep enough, a mulching with an inch of rotten manure in March is all that is needed. It is heat and light that makes callas bloom, not manure.

A TESTIMONIAL.

Trade journals as well as newspapers very laudably are glad to receive words of encouragement from their subscribers and are properly pleased to print them. A few words of praise costs little, but here is one that means business and is out of the common run:

"I keep all the back numbers of the REVIEW and in the winter while looking after the fires at night I take out all pages with nothing but advertisements on them and then bind the reading matter together and put covers of good heavy wrapping paper on them. I would not take $5 for any one of them."

Either the man who wrote those words is a most invaluable employee or an earnest, studious employer. We find our night fireman putting in his spare minutes at a game of pedro or seven-up with some neighbors. If we found him reading the pages of the REVIEW or binding the read copies in his homely but substantial way for future reference, we should assuredly think seriously that he was deserving of promotion. CONVENTION IMPRESSIONS

The following is a paper by A. F. J. Baur read before the State Society of Indiana Florists at its meeting at Indianapolis April 5:

You have had such full accounts of the carnation convention through the trade papers that I dare say most of you know almost as well as I who were there and what varieties made the best show at the exhibition, etc. So I will try as far as possible to steer clear of what you have already read in the papers and give you a few impressions that have come to me outside of the exhibition hall.

First of all, I want to say that the Detroit boys handled the convention in great shape. They did the right thing in every respect and nowhere did the carnation society feel more at home than it did at Detroit. The arrangements were complete and the way every detail was carried out showed a thorough organization of the force that had the work to do. They seem to be old hands at handling conventions. They have a beautiful hall, which was just right to age. One of the good features was the opening of the banquet at 7:30 instead of 9, as we did here. It gave ample time for every speaker to have his say without being limited as to time, and having to cut out some of the best parts. The speeches made at this banquet were very fine indeed, so interesting, in fact, that in spite of the fact that it lasted at least six hours, nobody seemed tired of listening. Most of the speakers seemed at their best and, besides the usual amount of jokes and yarns, there was some very sensible and interesting speaking.

A Dr. Smith, who is an honorary member of the Detroit Florists' Club, made a speech that appealed to every member present. He spoke of how in many he has found that a pretty plant or a bunch of flowers would do more good than his medicine. He said that often in his most difficult cases, he uses flowers as medicine, to cheer up the patient and make them want to get well. Then he told of how the great forests of the land are being cut away and how the scarcity of oxygen will affect the human race if the florist and nurseryman do not plant shrubs and trees and flowers to supply this life preserving oxygen to take up the carbonic gases, which are so deadly to all animal life. He said ber, he began by saying: "Mr. President, I don't know just what I am going to say, but I want to apologize before I begin." Then he would talk in a way that left no doubt as to what he meant to say.

Lewis Ullrich's paper entitled "Has It Ever Occurred to You?" was one of the best I have ever listened to. Our own Gurney Hill was in fine form and made the banner speech of the evening. You know some men can talk good hard sense for hours, but never a joke passes their lips, while others can joke and spin yarns for hours, but very little sense emanates from their mouths. Our friend Gurney is a past master at both, however, and when he did not have his audience in an uproar, he was talking to us in a sensible and elevating manner.

Mr. Sullivan displayed a sheet of paper about the size of a page in the News which was entirely covered with clippings from the local press about the carnation society and the convention. They realize that to make a success of such a thing you must have the good will and help of the press. They can stir up interest among the people that can't be aroused any other way. They reach the people.

Mrs. Vesey made a pretty little speech without any preparation, and I hope that some time when we have something doing in our town we may have her here to respond to a toast. There were twelve ladies present and they enjoyed the treat as much as the men.

The trip to Breitmeyer's place at Mt. Clemens was a very enjoyable affair and will be remembered by all who took it in for a long time. This is certainly a progressive firm, as is shown by the way they have been pushing their new rose, La Detroit. It was to view it that we were invited out there, and I must say it looks good. A few of us ran across the way to a carnation establishment owned by a Mr. Klage. Their carnations were grand, but the violets could not compare with those at Smith & Young's. After we had been at Breitmeyer's a little while, I could not help but feel sorry for John Hartje because he did not stay to take in this trip, and for Alex. Nelson because he did not come along. A part of the lunch consisted of a twenty-nine-pound fish of some kind, I don't know the name. I know they would have enjoyed a slice of that meat. I'll bet they would not work much if they lived up there. The water is too close at hand, so, perhaps, it was a good thing they were not there.

Of the show itself, you have read a good deal and know, perhaps, as much by this time as I do. On the first day the stock looked fine. The quality was very high except in substance in some cases. There was a good lesson there for those who are everlastingly craving for size. Enormous size can be reached only through high feeding, and unfortunately high feeding seems to destroy substance. Blooms that have been fed up to an enormous size will not keep nearly as long as blooms of good average size and grown normally on healthy plants. I have in mind a grower who is noted for his high feeding, and you could pick out his vases all over the hall. Many of his blooms went to sleep before he was through staging his exhibits and he had to rearrange many of his vases, picking the best blooms out of two or three vases to make up one good vase. And even then he was beaten all around.

I was glad to see the Lawson gold medal go to an Indiana variety. Dorner's Fiancee won it with 100 grand blooms. Dailedouze Bros. showed the largest blooms in the hall. Their new white seedling from Prosperity is a bloom fully five inches across. This bunch of blooms suggested to me the question: "What size should we strive for in a commercial carnation? Do we want blooms over four inches?" It seems to me a carnation will cease to be a carnation when it begins to look too much like a cabbage. From three to four inches ought to be as large as any one could want for even a fancy grade of carnations, and two and a half inches makes a very pretty bloom for an ordinary grade. More attention should be given to form, freedom and keeping qualities.

There should be some reward given to the vase that shows up best at noon of the second day. One of the carnation's strongest points in gaining the popular favor it now enjoys has been its keeping quality. It certainly looks bad to see half the blooms asleep before they have been up two full days, when we never hesitate to tell our customers that they can keep carnation blooms in good condition a week or ten days, which is true, too. There they see the largest and finest looking blooms going to sleep long before the more medium-sized ones begin to look drowsy. Before you know it, they will begin to fight shy of your large blooms. We consider it a great favor conferred on the public to allow them to view our fine exhibitions, but we should be very careful that we do not create any wrong impressions through our desire to win premiums, etc. Some of the vases held up fine, while others of the same varieties went to sleep early. Adonis held up fine and so did Mrs. Lawson, Moonlight and Indianapolis, while Enchantress retired early, all except Mr. Partridge's vase, which won two first premiums. This showed clearly that the growing has much to do with the keeping of a bloom.

Chicago seemed to be the popular choice for the meeting place for next year and every one agrees that it will be the best meeting we have ever held. I hope that this vicinity will send up a good delegation. By the way, I wonder hold the exhibition. It reminded one of the one in the German House, which we had two years ago. The exhibition, the meetings and the banquet were all held in the same building and in fact we could get our meals there, too, so we had to leave the building only when it was time to sleep. It was as convenient a place as the society has ever found for a meeting place. Harmonie Hall is about as convenient to the center of Detroit as the German House is here. We could walk to and from the hall in a few minutes.

Of Detroit, of course, we could not see much, as its attractions are attractive only in the summer when the water is open and the vegetation is dressed in its garb of bloom and foliage.

that an active florist is a great benefactor to a community in that way.

I wish that we could have a few such men in our society. Men who can talk eloquently and could help us to see more than the bare commercial side of our profession. I understand that the late Mr. Parker was such a man, and it would be well for us to hear a speech like Dr. Smith's at least three or four times a year.

For wit and humor, you want Mr. Pierce from up in Massachusetts. He has his own original style of telling things and sayings that never fail to tickle an audience. For instance, when he arose in one of the business meetings to oppose a suggestion made by another mem-how many of our boys who joined the carnation society two years ago are still members. I remember there was some talk of everyone joining for one year out of courtesy to the society. I think that is a very poor kind of courtesy, though. Why not join and stay joined? The $2 won't break you, and just think how much better you will enjoy it all whenever you can attend the convention and know that you are a member and have a real interest in everything that is going on. And when the banquet night draws near, you won't have to cause some friend the embarrassment of taking you into the banquet hall some way.

Have you ever stopped to think what the American Carnation Society has done for you? I won't say that it has caused the improvement of the carnation. The carnation had been greatly improved and was being steadily improved before the society was organized, but here is what did happen: Before the American Carnation Society came into existence there were a few firms who raised seedlings to get new and improved varieties. Each firm imagined that it had to put on the market from three to half a dozen or more varieties each year. It did not take a very good bloom to be as good as the average of that day and every variety that was about as good as the average was put on the market. Most of you will remember the blooms that were shown at your chrysanthemum shows about twelve to fourteen years ago. It did not take long to glut the market with a lot of inferior varieties and you did not know what to buy, lest you throw your good money away. Only a very few were of any value whatever. It was the American Carnation Society that put a stop to this by requiring a variety to score up to a certain standard before it could receive its approval, and it was soon found that its approval was essential to the successful launching of a new variety. This caused a more uniform improvement in the varieties offered to the trade, and a decided cutting down in the number offered. Those firms which offered half a dozen each year are now glad to have one or two each year. I don't say that the carnation society's plan of awarding certificates is perfect; in fact, I know it is not, and it is trying now to evolve a better plan, and no doubt it will materialize soon.

You all know these things, but do you ever stop to think that you are the men who really profit by the work of the society? You do, more than anyone else. While you do occasionally buy a variety that does not live up to its promise, you do get a much larger percentage of improved varieties than you used to get. And the varieties are very few that will not make you as much money per square foot as the old timers did, to say the least. Indiana stands right in the front rank in the production of new carnations and a large percentage of our bread winners, as well as prize winners, were born in Indiana. Indiana ought to be well represented in the American Carnation Society and I wish that every one of our members could be a member of that society, too. It would be nothing more than showing an honest appreciation of favors rendered.

A FEW HINTS ON PEONIES.

They love a well-drained bed or border, and should not be planted where water will stand during winter or spring, but they will grow and bloom most beautifully in almost any kind of soil. If possible, avoid planting them directly under a tree, or too near a hedge, for that would rob them of the necessary moisture which they should have during the summer, in order to lay up strength for the flowers produced the coming season. For the same reason do not allow blue-grass, or any other weed, to grow and share with your peonies the plant-food which they alone should have. Keep the bed well stirred for at least eighteen inches all around the plants. All herbaceous or perennial flowering plants bloom in proportion to the amount of care and treatment received the previous season. You should not expect much from anything that is half starved.

In making your peony bed or border, do not use fresh manure; it should be well rotted and thoroughly mixed with the soil for at least a foot in depth; eighteen inches of such fertilizing would give most wonderful results. Be quite liberal with the manure; if old and well rotted it will not harm the roots. Do not have the bed higher than the surrounding ground, but rather a little lower. Apply a coating of more manure each fall, and fork it into the ground in the spring. Always be careful not to disturb the buds that are just then getting ready to push through the surface. This kind of treatment will give you extra-large, bright-colored flowers, and lots of them, during May and June. Thin out a few of the weaker shoots after the clumps are several years old; fifteen to twenty should be the limit allowed to each clump. The flowers on those that remain will be just so much finer in proportion to this thinning.

Peony roots should not be disturbed when once planted; it takes several years for them to recover from shocks thus received. They cannot be divided while in the ground; the whole clump must be lifted.

In all my experience of fifteen years in growing peonies, I have yet to see an insect or bug infesting them. Ants will sometimes visit the buds and flowers to obtain some sweet substances found there, but they are absolutely harmless. It is a general belief that they injure the buds of flowers, but my observation and experience assure me that if the buds do not open or bloom, this is due to some other cause. In nine cases out of ten such plants were starved the previous summer, and cannot open their buds for lack of the necessary strength to do so. Neither gophers nor moles will touch a peony root, but will often carry away many varieties of lily bulbs and store them in their burrows.

Spring is when the amateur wants to plant peony roots. Early in April, or even in March, if the frost is out of the ground and it is not wet or soggy, is the best time to plant the roots. The ground should be mellow and in good condition. If you have ordered peony roots, and they arrive before you are ready to plant them, simply place them in moist earth in some cool place; they will be safe there for one, or even two or more weeks. Always turn the buds upward, so that if they should start they will grow straight. When planted the buds should be about two inches below the surface.

For the commercial grower of peonies September or October planting is by far the better practice, provided the ground is not too dry, which is often the case, especially here in Nebraska and through the northwest. In this case, dig a hole in your bed large enough to hold a few pails of water; fill the hole several times with water, then fill with moist soil—not soggy; now set the roots in the center, four inches below the surface to allow for settling during the winter. They should be well established and start at the proper time in spring.

Do not expect too much from your plants the first season. If you order and obtain good roots they will bloom the first year; but, as a general rule, the flowers will be small, in some instances only half double and also poor in color. The second year they should bloom well if they had the proper care during the previous summer.

I have never found it necessary to water a peony plant, even in the most prolonged drought or heat. In fact, they are better for not being watered, as it is very difficult to get the water down where it will do them any good, which is about eighteen to twenty-four inches below the surface of the soil under the plant. However, it will neither harm nor benefit them much if watered when the lawn is regularly sprinkled. Take a hoe or rake and stir the ground well around the plants after every such watering, and also after every rain. This will keep the surface from baking and allow the moisture below to be drawn up to the roots through capillary attraction.

Do not cut away the dry peony tops in the fall; they are the plants' natural winter protection. Add some fine manure and a little more coarse litter the first winter. Although this is not absolutely necessary to preserve the plants, yet they will spring up with greater vigor if given a little protection the first winter. Remove the litter and tops in spring and fork in the manure carefully.

cutting tuber was weak in comparison to divided root propagation. It fell in exactly with my experience and proved conclusively that if field roots could be secured in quantity sufficient to supply the demand, it would be far better than to propagate by cuttings.

The illustration accompanying Mr. Wilmore's article last week is a fair exhibit of comparative growth. The past season I have grown from cuttings field clumps that weighed over one pound, but I know there are a whole lot more grown that weigh less than a pound. I have also grown field clumps from divided roots that, after shaking off all the dirt possible without damaging the clump, weighed over twenty pounds and it was not any more than safe to push the clump into a half-bushel measure. We have no desire to carry the impression that this is the average, neither is two pounds the average clump grown from cuttings. The cutting is not particularly weak as to itself and what is expected of it, but it takes two years to average the well-grown dahlia clump from the divided root. The best use for the cutting clump is for the catalogue trade. Here it is all right and worth its cost, but no better than the properly divided root. Let us give each their due, but stick to the text.

HYDROCYANIC ACID GAS.

Nearly every owner of a greenhouse is interested in fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas and many hundreds are experimenting in its use. It is necessary in every case to determine with great care the cubic contents of the house, frame or box in which the fumigation is to be made. The illustration shows cross sections of two styles of greenhouse structures now in general use. At the left is an even-span house 12x100 feet, two feet on the sides, and five feet six foot three inches by 100 feet. Reducing to inches we have fourteen inches multiplied by fifteen inches by 1,200 inches equals 252,000 cubic inches; dividing this result by 1,728, the number of cubic inches contained in a cubic foot, we have 145.83 cubic feet. The rectangle A D G F is computed in the same way, except that in this case it is not necessary to reduce the feet to inches. It would be twelve feet multiplied by two feet by 100 feet equals 2,400 cubic feet.

This brings us to the triangles. The rule generally given for calculating the area of a right-angle triangle is to multiply the base by the perpendicular and divide the product by two. The result multiplied by the length of the house will give the number of cubic feet the triangular portion contains. For example, taking the triangle A C E; six feet multiplied by three feet six inches, equals twenty-one feet, divided by two equals 10.5 feet, multiplied by 100 feet equals 1,050 cubic feet. The area of the triangle E C D and the cubic feet in this part of the house are determined in the same way; or, in this case, since the triangles are equal, the desired result is obtained by multiplying the number of cubic feet in the triangle A C E by two; 1,050 multiplied by two equals 2,100 cubic feet. The contents of this house is therefore 145.83 plus 2,400 plus 2,100 equals 4,645.83 cubic feet; this result multiplied by the required dose per cubic foot of space will give the amount of cyanide of potassium necessary for one fumigation.

At the right of the illustration is a cross section of a three-quarter span house 18x100 feet, front wall four feet four inches, back wall six feet four inches, and eleven feet ten inches to the ridge. The cubic contents of this house is determined in the same manner, except that the two triangles being unequal, each one will have to be calculated separately. The house contains 15,050 cubic feet. It will thus be seen that the cubic contents of a house or frame of any style can be readily determined by simply dividing a cross section of the same into the necessary number of triangles and rectangles and calculating as demonstrated above.

After the number of cubic feet in the space to be fumigated is determined, the amount of cyanide required is found by multiplying the cubic contents by the dose per cubic foot. For example, if single violets are to be fumigated the dose would be one-tenth of a gram per cubic foot. A dose, therefore, for the even-span house, containing 4,646 cubic feet would be 4,646 multiplied by .1 equals 464.6 grams. To reduce this to ounces, divide the number of grams by 28.35, the number of grams in an ounce avoirdupois. It is found that 464.6 divided by 28.35 equals 16.38 ounces avoirdupois. It may be necessary to reduce the fraction of ounces to grains; 437.5, the number of grains in an ounce, multiplied by .38 equals 166 grains.

If double violets are to be fumigated the cubic contents would be multiplied by .15 thus: 4,646 multiplied by .15 equals 696.9 grams, divided by 28.35 equals 24.58 ounces avoirdupois. Fifty-eight one-hundredths of an ounce equals 253 grains. In the case of a small space of less than 150 cubic feet the dose in grams should first be determined, and this, if necessary, can be changed to grains by multiplying the number of grams by 15.43, grains in a gram, thus: thirty cubic feet multiplied by .15 gram

DAHLIA PROPAGATION.

As a grower of and one interested in the highest development of the dahlia perhaps I may be pardoned for another word under this head, as I was the innocent cause of the "weak thing" cognomen being applied to dahlia cuttings. But I have no wish to recall it. I have grown the dahlia for over twenty-five years, have seen some of the ups and downs of the flower, but still enjoy its beauty as ever and am also glad for any information that will keep its right foot forward and the flower on the gain. My first outside information from a supposedly good authority as to the weakness of the tubers grown from cuttings was received while on a visit east last September. At one place thousands of both kinds were growing and the information freely offered was that the inches from the surface of the beds to the ridge, with a walk fourteen inches wide and fifteen inches deep.

To determine accurately the number of cubic feet in this or a house of similar construction. First, make a rough drawing showing a cross section of the house; second, divide the space into triangles and rectangles by drawing a line connecting the two wall plates and one from the ridge at right angles to this; mark on each its respective length in feet and inches. Compute the number of cubic feet in each of the rectangles and triangles in accordance with the following method:

In the even span house shown at the left the number of cubic feet of space in the walk is found by multiplying the width by the depth by the length, thus: Multiply one foot two inches by one equals 4.5 grams, multiplied by 15.43 (grains in a gram) equals 69.435 grains, or approximately 69.5 grains. The reduction to ounces or grains will not be necessary if metric weights are used, which is strongly urged.

When the dose for certain plants in a given house, frame or box is once obtained, it should be carefully recorded on the house or box thus:

Contents 1,015 cubic feet, dose for ferns, .075 gram per cubic foot, equals 76.1 grams; for violets, double, at .15 gram per cubic foot, equals 152.25 grams.

If a scale weighing with avoirdupois weights is used, the dose should be recorded in ounces and grains.

ORCHID CULTURE.

At the regular meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, February 20, 1904, W. N. Craig, of North Easton, was the speaker and gave a "Talk on Orchid Culture," in which he brought out many valuable hints for the successful cultivation of these plants and threw much light upon a subject not generally well understood. He spoke in part as follows:

"The advance in American horticulture during the past fifteen years has been truly remarkable; especially striking has been the steady progress in matters pertaining to floriculture. While the rose, carnation, violet and chrysanthemum are still the most widely cultivated and popular of our greenhouse flowers, it must be admitted that orchids, the aristocrats of the floral kingdom, are greatly increasing in popularity and are being cultivated to a greater or less extent, in ten times the number of establishments, especially private ones, of a decade ago.

"We believe the idea, once so prevalent, of orchids being difficult to grow and flower is now pretty well exploded. Most of the popular varieties are of comparatively easy culture, and no one who is able to grow roses and carnations need be afraid to handle orchids. Many kinds will succeed well in any ordinary greenhouse, and we have on more than one occasion seen nicely flowered specimens grown in dwelling houses; such sorts as Dendrobium nobile, Cypripedium insigne, Lycaste Skinneri and Cælogyne cristata will flower satisfactorily in an ordinary bay window if frost is excluded and a little judgment is used in watering and other essential details.

"The general impression is that orchids are very costly and only to be secured by the wealthy. While it is true that their primary cost is higher than most other plants, they usually give their initial cost in flowers the first season, and especially is this true of the most showy and popular of our American orchids, the cattleyas. Nice, flowering-sized plants of most of our popular orchids can be had for from $2 to $5 apiece, while white cattleyas, yellow cypripediums, some of the choicer hybrids and other unique forms may bring from $100 to $500 each. The number of specimens changing hands at these prices is, however, very few in America; we believe that when the late F. L. Ames paid $1,000 for a white form of Cattleya gigas, he reached the maximum figure ever paid here. As high as $500, or even more, has been paid on many occasions, but the present tendency is to grow popular varieties of moderate cost and allow European fanciers to hold the very valuable species.

"We are now getting less and less of new species from the forests and more and more from the hybridist, and in the years to come one will be more dependent on the seedling raiser than on the forest collector. Orchids were successfully raised from seed in England and Ireland as far back as 1849, although it was not until 1860 that the Messrs. Veitch electrified the floral world by exhibiting the first seedling orchid before the Royal Horticultural Society of England. To-day seedling raising is a hobby with many private growers and a big industry with some commercial ones. In some respects seedling raising is being overdone. Particularly is this true of the cypripediums, which are now so crossed and intercrossed that no living authority could name them correctly.

"Twenty-five years ago East Indian orchids were all the rage, while now they are little seen. In America today cat-tleyas are our most popular orchid; in Europe odontoglossums are far in the lead. Our climate suits the one, while the European coolness is to the liking of the other. It is unfortunate that our hot summers make odontoglossum culture difficult here, for they are the most chaste and beautiful of all orchids; but we have the satisfaction, on the other hand, thanks to our clear skies, of growing better cattleyas than can be produced in Europe.

"Seedling raising in America is making good progress, cattleyas, lælio-cattleyas, sophro-cattleyas, cypripediums, cymbidiums, zygopetalums and other genera having been successfully intercrossed. Some especially fine cattleyas have been raised in late years. What we need here especially at the present time is a seedling raiser who will produce large lots of such standard cattleyas as Mossiae, Trianae, Mendelliana, labiata, which are superior to all seedlings so far raised where intercrossed. Such plants when of flowering size would readily bring much higher prices than dried specimens. Seedling raising has, during the past season, been successfully carried on in the open air in Oviedo, Florida, where an enthusiastic amateur has germinated numbers of cattleyas, lælio-cattleyas and dendrobiums on the mossy trunks of magnolia trees, protected by cheesecloth. Temperatures of 28 to 30 degrees were frequently recorded where these seedlings were raised. This proves a most interesting experiment and opens up great future possibilities.

"Seedling raising under glass is attended with many obstacles and difficulties. Good fern fibre of a soft, spongy nature is suitable upon which to sow the seeds. They will also germinate if sown on the surface of the soil of growing orchid plants or on calico cloth kept damp. Very great care in watering, ventilation and other details are necessary and if all these prove successful, flowering sized plants may be had in from two to ten years, according to the genera being worked upon.

"In the matter of compost nothing is better for the general run of orchids than good Osmunda fern fibre; sphagnum moss we are using less each year. Plants with growing moss on the surface of the pots or baskets look well, but what swarms of snails they bring and what havoc they raise with flower spikes and tender roots! Much has been written during the past few years on the culture of orchids in leaf mold, in preference to fern root. We tried it quite extensively and liked it for a time, but it eventually proved a failure and we have permanently abandoned it. Odontoglossums, miltonias, cattleyas and dendrobiums all deteriorated in it under the most careful treatment, and we do not believe it will ever be of any service in America.

"Cattleyas are easily the most popular of orchids in America. With the exception of chrysotoxa, which likes a higher temperature, all the varieties named do well in a night temperature of 55 to 60 degrees in winter, or even a few degrees lower. They like an abundance of ventilation on all possible occasions, and succeed well in baskets, pans or pots either suspended from the roof or on staging within three feet of the glass. Closely allied to the cattleyas are the laelias. There are now numerous Laelio-cattleyas, but as a rule they are too high-priced to be of general use.

"Cypripediums are very useful orchids. Their wonderful lasting properties and diversity of form will always make them necessary where any number of orchids are grown. Dendrobiums are among the most lovely of orchids. They like plenty of heat and moisture during the growing season, a thorough ripening of the bulbs in a light, sunny house, and the withholding of water until the flower nodes are well advanced. Celogynes, especially the cristata, are beautiful and easily-grown orchids for decorative purposes. Calanthes, especially C. Veitchii, with its long spikes of rosy pink flowers, are indispensable winter-blooming orchids. They need a brisk, moist heat during the growing season and should not be placed in a lower temperature than 55 degrees even when in bloom. Pot culture in fibrous loam and dried cow manure and applications of liquid manure during growing season are necessary.

"*Oncidium*s are less cultivated than a generation ago. Other East Indian orchids, including the vandas, arides, phalaenopsis and saccolabiums, while containing many beautiful and graceful species, are not at present as popular as they were twenty-five years ago. Miltonias are very beautiful, especially the summer-blooming M. vexillaria. Odontoglossums are the most beautiful of all orchids and the most difficult to grow in our eastern states. A few other useful orchids to grow are Phaius grandiflorus, Sophranitis grandiflora, Platyclinis glumacea, *cymbidium*s in variety, Zygopetalum Mackayi and Epidendrum vitellinum majus.

"We do not believe that private estates in America, except in special cases, will form extensive orchid collections as in Great Britain, and the tendency will be more to grow batches of a limited number of species for cut flower purposes or for other decorative effects. Their culture, from a commercial standpoint, will not progress as will that in private establishments, but their popularity will increase in the years to come and within ten years the number of growers will be quadrupled. They will never be the flower of the masses, like the rose, carnation and violet, but will always be curious, interesting, beautiful and bewitching to the ever increasing army of flower lovers."

BORDEAUX HAS NEW USE.

Prof. B. T. Galloway, of the U. S. bureau of plant industry, recently made a statement to the effect that the department experts have come to the conclusion that Bordeaux mixture will exterminate the germs of typhoid and malaria in water, purify and clarify the water itself, and dissolve the slimy green substance, or "algae," frequently found on the surface of stagnant pools of shallow water.

Department experts have been extremely careful not to announce the discovery officially, because it is yet a subject for daily investigation. Experiments are now in progress in New York, Boston, and elsewhere looking toward the application of the Bordeaux mixture as a means of removing typhoid germs from reservoirs which supply drinking water to those cities.

Department officials are not yet prepared to recommend that the general public should experiment on drinking water with this germicide, because they have found that one part of the solution to 10,000,000 parts of water seems to be sufficient to kill off germs, and miscellaneous experiments might result in exterminating an unpleasant number of human beings.

The Bordeaux mixture, according to the department formula, is made up as follows: Pour into a fifty gallon barrel twenty-five gallons of water; then weigh out six pounds of crushed blue stone or copper sulphate, and, after tying it in a piece of coarse sacking, suspend the package just beneath the surface of the water by means of a string tied to a stick laid across the top of the barrel.

In another suitable vessel such as a tub or half-barrel, slack four pounds of fresh lime. Slack the lime carefully, pouring on small quantities of water at a time, the object being to obtain a smooth and creamy liquid free from grit. When the lime is slacked add sufficient water to make twenty-five gallons. As soon as the blue stone is dissolved, which will require an hour or more, pour the lime, milk, and blue stone solution together, using a separate barrel for the purpose, and stir constantly to effect a thorough mixing. To be certain the mixture is safe, hold a steel knife blade in it for two or three minutes and if the polished surface of the blade shows a copper-colored tinge, add more lime, but if it stays bright, the mixture is ready for use.—Chicago Tribune.

BRITISH FAIR EXHIBITS.

The Gardeners' Chronicle mentions that the material for planting the garden about the British pavilion at the St. Louis World's Fair, beyond the trees and hedges, has been contributed by the various firms in England, the chief exhibitors being the following: Cannell & Sons, Swanley, hardy herbaceous plants and seeds; J. Carter & Sons, High Holborn, bulbs and seeds; J. Cheal & Sons, Crawley, dahlias; Cutbush & Sons, Highgate, specimens of topiary work, clipped yews, box, &c.; J. Forbes, Hawick, phloxes; Hobbies Ltd., dahlias; Kelway & Sons, Langport, gladioli, delphiniums, and other plants and seeds; Amos Perry, Winchmore Hill, hardy herbaceous plants; Messrs. Sutton & Sons, Reading, gladioli, lilies, narcissi and other bulbs.

ST. PAUL.

The Easter Market.

Trade was not ideal, although business was fully equal to or a little ahead of previous years. There was a good supply of everything, although more lilies and violets would have found a market. In cut flowers retail prices were advanced about twenty-five per cent. Plants sold at usual prices, although extra fine, well trimmed stock reached fancy figures. All the leading stores had extra displays, prominent among these being the windows of L. L. May & Co., the excellent stock of plants of the Swanson Floral Co. and the magnificent display made by Holm & Olson. Fancy baskets of plants and violet hampers figured more prominently than ever before. Lilies were not as good as usual and a great many were late. One of the surprises of the trade was the demand for palms and Boston ferns.

Trade since Easter has been very gratifying and all surplus stock has been closed out daily. X. Y. Z.

NEW CUMBERLAND, PA.—J. A. Kepner, the Elkwood florist, is ill with pneumonia.

DUNBAR, PA.—Easter went off very good as people took a pretty fair interest in flowers and everything sold well.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.—Wm. Waters, agent, has moved his greenhouse to the old Avis property and is just now doing a big business in vegetable plants.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

It is hard to realize the contrast between the past week and Easter week in the New York wholesale market. Prices literally tumbled, until by Saturday it was hard to find a word in English expressive enough to cover the conditions that prevailed. Special Beauties had fallen to about one-fourth of Easter prices, 10 to 15 cents being the common rate for them. Special Maids retrograded to 6 cents for the finest and medium and inferior stock was cleaned out at an price that was offered. Callas and Harrissi could seldom touch over 6 cents for the best. Carnations were abundant; 3 cents was top. Thousands went at 1 and 2 cents and even the novelties were as low as 4 cents. Violets were cut in two, that is, the specials dropped to 50 cents and others 25 cents and even 15 cents per 100, according to quality. The warm, sunny weather gives promise of a flood of bloom this week and even lower prices. The after Lent weddings, however, are on the increase, society is blossoming into activity again and there is good promise of a profitable April. But the era of high prices is "closed for the season."

Club Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Club took place Monday evening and was well attended. The outing committee reported everything progressing favorably towards the club's annual festival in June and placed tickets on sale. Harry May and A. E. Asmus were elected to membership and A. S. Burns, Jr., of Spring Valley, was nominated. With a view to transportation arrangements for the club to the St. Louis convention, Messrs. O'Mara, Bunyard and Guttman, were appointed a committee. A goodly attendance from New York is already a certainty. Messrs. Stewart, Butterfield and Weathered were appointed as a committee to draft suitable resolutions on the death of Mrs. Devoy, of Poughkeepsie, mother of the club's member, P. T. Devoy.

Wilhelm Miller, now connected with Country Life in America, was present at the club meeting and gave an interesting address in the course of which he announced that Prof. Bailey had secured the passage of the bill by both houses at Albany, appropriating a quarter of a million dollars towards the establishment of the new College of Agriculture at Cornell. He paid a generous tribute to the ability and character of Prof. Bailey. Mr. O'Mara spoke of the value of the government experiment stations and of Country Life in America. The reading of the paper on "Easter in New York," followed and a vote of thanks was tendered the author, the REVIEW's New York representative. The commissary department added its quota to the enjoyment of the evening.

P. T. Devoy, of Poughkeepsie, was a visitor at the meeting. He had with him some fine flowers and a plant of his new geranium, Telegraph, which is a seedling of 1900, and of which some 10,000 plants are in stock. At the Dutchess County Society in November, a certificate of merit was awarded and the same honor was conferred by the New York Florists' Club at this session. The flower is of rare size and brilliancy, and was greatly admired. Other exhibits were Nephro-lepis Scottii, from John Scott, and the new rose Mme. Norbert Levavasseur, the dwarf Crimson Rambler and a fine thing from Vaughan's greenhouses.

The club's May meeting will have an exhibit of bedding plants and William Elliott will read his humorous paper on the "Idiosyncrasies of the Auction Business." At the June meeting the exhibit will include peonies and summer flowers, and will be made a ladies' night, preparatory to the outing which follows shortly after. There will be no meetings of the club during July and August. At the September meeting there will be an exhibit of perennials and asters, and other outdoor flowers. Bronx park and the private gardeners are requested to participate. The October meeting will be devoted to an exhibit of cannas and dahlias, and chrysanthemums and violets will entertain the members and their friends in November. The final meeting of the year, December 12, will be devoted to the supply houses and exhibits of novelties and designs for Christmas will be encouraged.

More About Easter.

Easter still remains a pleasant memory. The returns are all in and there is nothing to gainsay the record of the best Easter on record. The sales of violets were phenomenal. On one wholesale sheet the total showed an aggregate of 530,600. Of this immense quantity 83,000 were received from one shipper, almost as many as reached the New York market altogether a score of years ago. Another wholesale house sold over 400,000, another 350,000, another a quarter of a million, and so on down the list, nearly 3,000,000 being distributed from the New York wholesale market. The supply, large as it was, was completely exhausted.

A violet expert among the wholesalers tells me that sixteen years ago, 130,000 violets would cover Easter shipments; that twelve years ago $1 a 100 was considered a very high price, while 75 cents was the average. Last year the quality was poor and the prices high, $1.50 per 100. That the atmospheric conditions before Easter decide values and amount of shipments and really control the violet market. Fine weather means the sale of all that reach the New York market, while of good stock there never has been an overproduction. Twenty years ago 80,000 violets sold by one wholesale house was considered remarkable, while now a single grower sometimes sends more than this amount to the market. He predicts for Easter 1905 a small stock and poor quality, owing to the lateness of the festival. He thinks the success of the present year was due largely to the rainy and unseasonable weather, the comparatively limited supply, the excellent quality of the stock and the reasonable prices. If the weather had been fine the market would have been flooded.

The favorite carnation was the Lawson. Many of the wholesale houses disposed of over 10,000 of this variety. The value of not crossing bridges until one reaches them was again exemplified. The majority approached Easter with fear and trembling. The winter was bad enough to rattle any expert and the veterans had lost their nerve. The weather, up to Good Friday night, was abominable. But the whole face of things was changed by the sunlight of Saturday and Sunday noon victory perched upon every banner.

The retail stores everywhere shared in the great success. The plants left over in no case, even with the smallest stores, were more than enough to furnish a respectable window decoration. The pyramidal azaleas sold well, as did every novelty. The dwarf Crimson Rambler was greatly admired, a plant not over two feet in height, covered with clusters of red flowers and, in fact, not a Rambler at all but the new rose, Mme. Norbert Levavasseur, whose parentage is Turner's Crimson Rambler and Gloire des Polyantha. It is a beautiful thing and sure to be very popular. The flowers are of a brighter red and said to be a continuous bloomer throughout the summer. The photos of some of the leading stores, in last week's issue and this, indicate fairly well the variety of plants sold and the attention paid to artistic and attractive groupings.

Various Items.

The seedsmen are overwhelmed with work owing to the lateness of the season and the sudden coming of summer temperature. The next few weeks will be the busiest of their lives. This condition is universal. There is enough and to spare for all and not an establishment fails to share in the general prosperity.

The auctions are now in full blast, the advent of spring filling the rooms with eager buyers. The stock is first-class and prices are now quite satisfactory.

The greenhouses of Julius Roehrs, at Carlton Hill, were placed upon the list of the generous by the recording angel on the Sunday before Easter, when by the admission of the public a handsome sum was realized for the Passaic General Hospital. It is an example of thoughtful generosity worthy of emulation.

H. A. Siebrecht addressed the members of the Horticultural Society of New York Wednesday evening on "Tree Planting in the City Streets," a subject he is most competent to handle from many years' experience.

Last week the inventor of John Westcott's punch and A. B. Cartledge, of Philadelphia, visited James Dean, of Freeport, L. I. As Sam Bernard says in The Girl from Kays: "Sufficiency."

Chas. Schenck, of Traendly & Schenck, was the proud recipient and exhibitor of a handsome diamond ring last week, the gift of Arcana Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he has been the honored master during the past two years.

Ralph Perkins, who was so seriously ill, is now on the way to complete recovery. It was a narrow escape, his case having been given up by all as hopeless.

William Elliott is an original advertiser. His latest was a lamb in front of his store on Dey street surrounded by boxes of his sheep fertilizer with a unique announcement on the cage that can better be imagined than described.

H. H. Berger & Co. say that orders for fall delivery are coming in rapidly already and that the outlook is very encouraging.

Adiantum Croweanum grows in favor and its popular disseminator, Wm. Kastling, has a winner as usual. Its fronds are great keepers. John I. Raynor has controlled and popularized it in New York.

John Scott, of Flatbush, is also in the crest of the wave with his new fern Scotti, a certain and practical success.

N. Lecakes is again in the city after a visit to his old home in Greece.

H. C. Steinhoff, of Hoboken, has left for his annual trip to Bermuda.

Thieves plundered the cash register of Robert G. Wilson, Sunday, having entered through an unlocked rear window. Mr. Wilson said about $50 in bills and silver was taken.

Bowling.

The bowling club met Monday afternoon, and made some excellent records. The attendance was light. The best three games follow:

Haffner	163	165	233
Siebrecht	150	140	152
Nugent	89	100	116
Shaw	169	160	152
Roehrs	155	164	168
James	156	148	132

Next Monday evening will be an important one. Matters of interest to the club will be decided. Every member is requested to be present without fail.

The Market.

Last week's market was very unsatisfactory, the accumulation of stock being decidedly unwieldy and prices low. There was a surplus in practically every line and a great deal of stock was sold in job lots at whatever the buyer was willing to give. This week conditions are slightly improved, the few days of dark and cold weather having served to retard production. There is yet, however, an ample supply for all requirements and prices are not as stiff as should be the case in comparison with the high grade of stock. It is seldom that the average receipts in this market have graded as well as at the present time but there is considerable complaint upon the part of wholesalers and growers that it is impossible to clean up each day's receipts; while the prospect is that a few bright days will largely augment the supply. It looks very much as though the spring glut were at hand. Country trade is holding up fairly well, although requirements are light, but city demand is again very weak, but this is nothing unusual at this season of the year.

Various Items.

L. Coatsworth and Leonard Kill went to St. Louis last night with some exhibits for the rose show to be given today by the St. Louis Florists' Club.

August Lange has closed the Floralia.

Geo. Reinberg reports that he used 122 cars of coal this winter.

A. L. Randall Co. has put in an addressograph to facilitate getting out price lists on short notice.

Frank Garland and M. Winandy will move into Room 218 in the Atlas block the latter part of this week.

Lottie Wilson, who was for a long time employed by A. G. Prince & Co., and later by Bassett & Washburn, died on Sunday. Several of the wholesalers sent flowers to her funeral Tuesday.

L. P. Kelly has moved his retail store to 423 W. Taylor street.

Chas. Balluff is looking for an opportunity to get back into the florists' business. He has had much experience in both the wholesale and retail departments.

A committee consisting of P. J. Hauswirth, H. C. Rowe and E. F. Winterson made an effort to get the mayor to override the ruling which prohibited flowers being sent to the council chamber for the aldermen who took their seats Monday night. They had a petition signed by practically all the wholesale and retail florists, but were told that they were too late to do anything for this year and flowers were barred, at a loss to the trade estimated at from $3,000 to $4,000. The same committee will go ahead and endeavor to get the rule rescinded before another year comes around and they will also take hold of the matter of the ban placed on flowers by the superintendent of schools, which is a more important matter, even, than the one relating to the city council.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. reports that March was the best spring month in its history, both in the wholesale and retail departments.

Stephen Costigan, who formerly kept a flower store on the north side, is reported missing by his mother, who lives in Cleveland and who has asked the police to locate her son.

Among the week's visitors were F. J. Foster, of St. Louis, and Abraham Grofvert, of Kalamazoo, Mich.

There was a meeting of the Horticultural Society on Tuesday. No business was done further than to appoint a nominating committee. There was considerable discussion of fall flower show affairs.

Flint Kennicott has suffered all winter with rheumatism and is now compelled to use a cane.

Ludwig Mosbaek lost about $800 in the recent big wind, which demolished a house filled with Boston and Piersoni ferns. His windmill, barn and coal shed were blown a long distance and all the trolley and other poles for a mile were blown down.

P. J. Hauswirth had the decorations for the Hamilton Club's large banquet April 9.

That many growers were late with their Easter lilies is shown by the quantities now in market. They are slow sale.

The weather man keeps a record of average temperatures and has it figured out that in the 102 days of the year to April 13 we were just 452 degrees short of the normal amount of heat.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Business in cut flowers is anything but rushing and, with heavy crops coming in, a general glut is not far off. Roses are accumulating and so are carnations. The demand for American Beauties is very light; the best can be bought at 30 cents. Brides and Maids are offered as low as $2 to $6 per 100. Some specials bring $10, but these must be fine. Fine carnations are quoted at $15 per 1,000 while fancy novelties bring only $3 per 100. Lilies are plentiful; $8 per 100 for the very best is the asking price. Violets have no fixed value. An abundance of fine yellow and white daisies, mignonette, sweet peas, candy-tuft, cut baby primrose and lilac is about. The only decidedly new flower in the market is yellow, white and purple Spanish iris, which is very fine indeed. Smilax is a very scarce article, but plenty of the other greens can be had to fill out on this green.

Bulbous stock, such as tulips, daffodils, narcissi, etc., is almost a thing of the past, and I judge from the leftover stock previous to Easter and the week following, this industry was just a trifle overdone. With all the growers in this section indications point to an abundance of flowers for some time to come.

Various Notes.

Theo. F. Beckert is cutting quantities of Spanish iris, which are handled by the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. This firm is also receiving some extra fine Adonis, Goethe and Enchantress carnations from the Crystal farm at Bakerstown.

Burki is adding one more greenhouse to his Bakerstown plant, also a filtration plant for the water supply is now under construction.

Mose Dunlevy is cutting very fine narcissi, Bicolor Empress, Emperor and Sir Watkins as big as any one would want them.

Charles Hoffmeyer is cutting strong on a house of Kaisersins of good quality.

H. L. Blind & Bros. have a full crop of Maids and Brides which are hard to beat.

The season is exceedingly late, and no opportunity for outside work has presented itself.

Randolph & McClements say business is very satisfactory. Numerous good-sized wedding decorations are keeping them busy. Nothing but the very best stock is handled by this firm.

L. I. Neff, who has four retail flower shops, reports business fair with good prospects for a busy spring trade.

A. W. Smith was very busy last week with several large wedding decorations.

P. Peterman is supplying E. C. Ludwig with pink dahlias, A. D. Livoni, which were forced and came in for Easter.

S. J. Hatch, of the Wilkinsburg Floral Co., was married April 5 to Miss Mary Schumaker, of Wilkinsburg. Another florist has also joined the ranks of the benedicts. James Moore, who was married April 9 to Miss Mary Watt, is foreman of the Phipps Conservatories at Allegheny park.

Superintendent George Burk, of the Phipps Conservatories at Schenley park, estimated that 15,000 persons visited the flower show last Sunday, April 10.

Visitors: Charles Lindacher, Canton, O.; E. P. Hostetter, Manheim, Pa.

Hoo-Hoo.

WATERTOWN, CONN.—H. A. Roeske says that the season's business is very good. He is having his usual fine results with sweet peas, for which he is noted.

KNIGHTSTOWN, IND.—Floyd Williams has purchased Frank Brighthill's interest in the Beeman greenhouses and will continue the business with Will Konzleman.

IN the classified advertisements of H. H. Berger & Co., March 31, the prices of maples and magnolias should have read each and per dozen instead of dozen and hundred.

CALLA, O.—Richard and Wilbur Tempin have sold their greenhouse property and all that pertains thereto to Norman Bushinger and Charles W. Hendricks, who will continue the business.

IRON MOUNTAIN, MICH.—G. F. Plowman will build another house 20x100 feet this season. He reports Easter trade as 100 per cent heavier than ever before. Lilies were fine and sold out clean. Flowering plants took the lead but cut flowers sold well.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The latter part of the week following Easter the weather was cold, blustery and raining, and the past week has been correspondingly dull, with stock of all kinds and in all grades abundant and prices about half of the preceding week.

The week's business, among the retailers, consisted chiefly of funeral work, a few weddings and the opening of the new Jefferson Hotel, which used up quite a lot of cut flowers, also the ball held there which was one of the big social events of the year. Quite a number of weddings, receptions and dinner parties were reported for this week, for which any amount of first-class flowers are in the market.

A number of retailers are complaining that some of the shipments for Easter were what they termed "bum" stock, especially carnations, some of them unfit to send out to their customers. The latter part of last week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, the market broke badly, in roses especially, including Beauties. The special grade of these came in so freely that the price has fallen below $3 per dozen. The smaller roses, such as Bride, Maid, Carnot, Golden Gate, Meteor and Perle, are sacrificed at an exceedingly low price, for $3 and $4 is surely a low price for choice stock. The quality of this stock was never better.

Carnations, too, are very plentiful at this writing and stock very fine. Fancies in Lawson, Wolcott and Enchantress sold as low as $3, with first-class stock at from $1.50 to $2 per 100. These prices bid fair to continue throughout the present week, as the wholesalers say the glut is on good and proper.

Violets are becoming scarcer, small and somewhat shriveled up and very much off color, still the best sell at 50 cents per 100. Harrisii are plentiful at $12.50. Callas go at $10. Paper Whites and Romans are almost over. Daffodils are a drug and so are jonquils. Valley is still good, at $3. Dutch hyacinths run $4 per 100. Sweet peas have some demand, with plenty in the market for all. First-class smilax is scarce, with a good demand at from 15 to 18 cents per string.

Shipping trade, which has been good at the wholesale houses, has fallen off since Easter. From reports it was very satisfactory for the season.

Various Notes.

J. W. Craig, of Philadelphia, is in the city looking after the planting around the Pennsylvania building at the World's Fair grounds.

The souvenir book of the St. Louis Florists' Club for our S. A. F. convention in August is now being pushed. This will be one of the most handsome books of its kind ever gotten up. It will give the desired information to those who will attend the convention, in fact a complete guide of the city and the World's Fair grounds. It will also be handsomely illustrated with photographic views of all the prominent places in the city and buildings at the World's Fair grounds, also of all the prominent members of our society. So every member of the S. A. F. may look for one at least one month in advance of the convention.

Superintendent Kuehn, of the trade display, has the plans of the exhibition hall in the hands of the printer and will be ready for mailing by the first of the week. Mr. Kuehn thinks that space will be at a premium by June 1. The convention is only eighteen weeks off and all committees are in working order. F. M. Ellis, chairman of the hotel committee, is perfecting his plans for hotel accommodations for the craft before, during and after the convention. Those in the trade who intend visiting us during this time should communicate with Mr. Ellis, at 1316 Pine street, who will be glad to answer all questions regarding hotel accommodations.

The few warm days early in the week found the plant stands in Union Market open and doing a rushing business. Among those who made displays were C. Young & Sons, Wm. Schray & Sons and C. C. Sanders. Trade in fruit, shade and ornamental trees, also hardy shrubs of all kinds, is very good this spring. Seedsmen on Third and Fourth streets report a big trade in grass seed and expect from now on to be very busy with everything in their line.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Trade has not been very satisfactory since Easter. While now and then there has been a little spurt, on the whole things have been moving along very quietly and there has been little to disturb the generally serene atmosphere. True, there have been some good sized wedding decorations and also a goodly lot of funeral work, but had it not been for these there would have been a glut of no small size on hand. At present transient trade is very quiet.

Ever since Easter roses have been coming by the thousands and the price has dropped till the buyer has things very much his own way. The man who buys job lots is now in his glory and if he is lucky enough to have a lot of funeral work he is reaping a harvest. A majority of the roses are of poor quality and it is at times hard to fill even a small order with first-class stock. Ivory and Gate are much in evidence and there is some really fine stock of these varieties. There is not nearly so large a supply of carnations and at times there are not enough to fill orders. The price is holding up better than on roses. They are showing much better keeping qualities than for some time past. Bulbous stock is selling quite well, all things considered, and the supply and demand are about equal. Violets are scarce. Eastern ferns are about used up for this season, but there are some good dagger ferns that are selling well. Smilax is very scarce and asparagus of all kinds is equally so. There is very little adiantum.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Critchell have returned to Atlanta, Ga., after making a short visit with the home folks.

L. F. Darnell, store man for the J. M. Gasser Co., of Cleveland, passed through this city Monday on his way home from the south. He put in his time visiting some of our greenhouses.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held Saturday night. The attendance was quite small but some business was done. It was voted to award the S. A. F. silver medal to The Cardinal and the bronze to Indianapolis, subject to the approval of the S. A. F.

Now that Easter business has been figured up and about all in the trade heard from, I find that on a general average it was fully as good as last year, but I doubt if it was any better. This was due more to the very bad weather we had than to anything else. There is no question in my mind but that, if the weather had been better, this year's Easter trade would have been fully twenty-five per cent ahead of last year.

C. J. OHMER.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Since Easter trade has been dull, with flowers generally in oversupply. A number of large weddings which used flowers quite extensively helped to support the market. Prices all around have dropped considerably from a week ago. Violets are getting smaller, although Wm. Sim and other growers are still sending in extra fine stock. Mayflowers from the Plymouth woods are now quite plentiful and sell on sight.

Various Notes.

Wm. Sim, of Cliftondale, is one of the most successful of the larger growers for the Boston market. His pick of Princess of Wales violets for Easter was 120,000, all of first-rate quality. Sweet peas he also grows superbly; his Easter cut of these was 45,000. The only varieties grown are Mont Blanc and Earliest Of All. Probably no such sweet peas were ever before seen in this or any other market. Mr. Sim also grows stock for Decoration day trade in quantity, chrysanthemums, cucumbers and tomatoes.

Azaleas are at present the most salable of pot plants and the various florists are making good displays of them. W. E. Doyle, at his Boylston street store, had his large window filled with beautiful specimens of Vervaneana the past week.

Thomas Galvin, at his Tremont street store, has a window entirely filled with Carnation Mrs. M. A. Patten, one of Peter Fisher's introductions. The blooms were of superb quality and attracted considerable attention.

There will be quite a number of valuable special prizes offered at the meeting of the American Rose Society here in 1905, by residents of Boston and vicinity.

Peter Fisher speaks before the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club on April 20, on "The Carnation." He is sure of a large and interested audience. It will pay disseminators of novelties to send a few blooms along for this meeting.

S. J. Goddard is busy on his new greenhouse plant at Framingham. He is one of the most successful carnation growers for our market and has one or two seedlings which will be heard from later.

Dutch bulb travelers have been quite numerous of late and claim to have booked very large orders. Some of them are looking up private places and offering goods at the same rates as to market growers, as well as making other "special inducements" to purchasers.

The schedule for the Massachusetts Horticultural Society has usually not been issued before January 1, but this year it is hoped to place it in the hands of all would-be exhibitors not later than September 1. An effort will be made to considerably increase flower and plant premiums. The question is sometimes debated as to whether or not music pays at flower shows. At the spring exhibition in Boston in 1903 music was used at a five-day show. This year it was dispensed with entirely at the four-days exhibition recently held. The results would seem to justify the change, for John Farquhar, chairman of the committee of arrangements, states that the net profits will be about $250 more than in 1903. So far as can be learned, only two ladies were found who wanted their money back owing to the absence of music, and it was cheerfully returned.

The results of the late winter are becoming more evident as we get warmer weather. Rhododendrons are badly killed and where plants are spared flower buds are killed, Rhododendron maximum suffering even worse than the Catawbiense hybrids. Kalmias and andromedas also died out badly. Numerous other evergreens are badly scorched. Crimson Rambler rose, which has also previously proved ironclad, is entirely killed above the snow line. That pretty Rosa rugosa variety, Mme. Georges Bruant, is killed out entirely. Many other rose species have suffered severely. Some of the viburnums, forsythias, weigelas, stephanandras, ligustrums and other deciduous shrubs are badly killed and much planting will be needed to replace dead stock.

There will be a prize exhibition at Horticultural Hall on May 7. Classes are provided for Azalea indica, calceolarias, pelargoniums in variety, tulips, narcissi, native plants and a variety of vegetables.

The energies of growers are now being bent on stock for the Decoration day trade, which assumes immense proportions in New England. Probabilities are that more outdoor flowers than usual will be in season this year, owing to the lateness of the spring.

W. N. CRAIG.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The halcyon days of the cut flower market are over for the season. Stock is coming in freely and a marked decrease in the volume of business at the close of last week caused a bad break in prices. Some improvement was shown this week, thanks to good local and shipping orders, but there is not near enough business to absorb the stock offered.

Lilies are as was expected very plentiful and can be had in quantity for a mere song. Carnations have fallen off considerably, especially the fancy grades, which have been so popular during the season. Violets are also much lower in price, but decrease in production prevents their decline being so marked as is that of other flowers. Sweet peas are in good and valley in fair demand, with some pretty nice stock offered. Beauty and Edgely have fallen off about one-half and are very much harder to sell than at last week's quotations. Select tea roses are fairly desirable, but seconds and culls are a burden indeed. Daffodils of every description are to be had for the asking, or nearly so, and tulips are little used. The bright particular spot on the list are the greens; smilax, asparagus and hardy ferns are all in active demand.

Various Items.

The April meeting of the Germantown Horticultural Society was held on Monday evening in Association Hall. There was a good display of blooming plants. "The Preparation of Soil," by Albert Woltemate, and the "Harbingers of Spring" were the subjects for discussion.

A Japanese catalogue just received in this country closes with the following delightful paragraph: "And I as well as any Japanese, also beg to thank to the kind sympathy expressed by the American and English friends toward the present hostilities against Russia."

B. Eschner received a message from M. Rice, on the Deutschland in mid-ocean by Marconi wireless telegraphy.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving fine lavender sweet peas.

The Florists' Club is considering a May party in June at Essington.

Wm. K. Harris had an unusually good Easter. His stock was exceptionally well grown.

A. Leuthy, of Boston, was a visitor lately.

The street fakirs are in their glory now, offering quantities of flowers at tempting prices.

Edward Reid has the sympathy of his friends in the loss of his father-in-law, Mr. Anderson, of Garrettford.

Albert Woltemate grew a very large stock of plants for Easter. His lilies sold out cleanly.

Charles F. Edgar & Co. have had some good shipping orders this week.

The bulb growers' salesmen are not meeting with a very good demand this season from florists who force Dutch bulbs for cut flowers. The demand for bulbs for outdoor planting is increasing, however.

W. J. Baker still wears the satisfied look of one conscious of hard work well done despite the present quiet.

W. P. Peacock, Ateo, N. J., was in town this week.

Easter Trade.

The memory of the past few weeks has been entirely supplanted by satisfaction over the results of the Easter trade. Our efforts were put to a great test in bringing stock into bloom at the right time. The pioneers of Oregon do not remember such a wet season in twenty years. During February we had twelve inches of rain and only ten hours of sunshine. March treated us little better. April brought the first real signs of spring. The Saturday before Easter was fine until 6 p. m., but from that time till midnight it rained great guns. Sunday was an ideal day. From reports to date we are able to state that a 20 per cent increase was realized over last year, all good available stock being easily disposed of and at a slight advance on regular prices. We have learned that the public will not stand high prices at Easter in our temperate climate. Nothing new in the way of novelties was introduced, but all blooming plants were finely done and trimmed to suit the most fastidious.

The Easter lily again maintained its popularity and there were none left unsold. Azaleas and spiræas were also in demand, but they sell better here in the winter months. Potted hyacinths were the finest seen here in years, single plants retailing as high as 50 cents each. There were enough plants to meet all demands, as cut flowers are a more important factor in our city.

Considering the early date of Easter and the absence of sunshine, the quality of home-grown stock was all that could be expected; and liberal importations from California enabled us to fill all orders in the cut flower line. Calla lilies were more freely used in church decorations than heretofore and there were plenty of them. We grow them here on five-foot stems, as vigorous as Oregon timber. Those shipped in from California are too soft and poorly packed to be a profitable investment. The supply of roses was limited, as there is never a surplus here during the wet season. Prices ranged from $1.50 to $4 per dozen. The carnation might be styled the queen of the flower market, as it seems to be a favorite with all and is more generally used here than any other flower. Leading varieties retailed from $1 to $2 per dozen. Violets were seen at their best and were on in full crop. In quantity, bulbous stock predominated and sold fairly well at a moderate price. Most of it was grown outside and that protected from the heavy rain was par excellence in quality.

An item which helped to swell the receipts of the week was an unusually large call for funeral work. All good short-stemmed flowers were used to an advantage.

GENEVA, ILL.

Geneva has become headquarters for one of the largest Boston fern producing establishments in the west. The soil conditions seem particularly suited to this plant and Davis Bros. make it their specialty. They have 15,000 feet of glass and it is wholly given up to the fern, their stock at the present time being close to 25,000 plants, including all sizes. They have about 80,000 feet of glass at their other establishment at Morrison, Ill., where practically the whole run of greenhouse stock is grown, even vegetables being a profitable item there.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Easter Trade.

Easter trade was a record breaker but about all the sales were made on Saturday. Friday was so wet that there was hardly any business, but Saturday was as if made to order and by noon there was a shortage on many lines of stock. Flowering plants took the lead, with Lilium Harrisii in the front and pink and white azaleas a close second. The azaleas were very good this year, also the rhododendrons and much in demand. Hydrangeas were less in demand, as were Crimson Ramblers, hybrid roses, genistas and ericas. Primroses were very scarce, very few being in bloom. Pansies were in demand but no supply. Azaleas, lilies and carnations were the best ever seen at Easter, and the supply was as large as the quality was good. Some of the local growers helped to make bulbous stock plentiful by keeping their tulips in cellars a couple of weeks too long; nevertheless every one sold. The demand for violets was equal to the call for a football game and everyone was sold out soon after noontime, and Sunday morning the retailers were hurrying around to see where they could get a few flowers or plants to fill orders and “any old thing” would do as long as it showed a little color.

Vegetable Forcing.

SOUTHERN vegetables are dominating the New York and Philadelphia markets, but prime indoor stock still finds a ready and profitable market.

CHICAGO, April 13.—Radishes, 25 to 75 cents dozen bunches; rhubarb, $1.50 per 40-lb. box; lettuce, $2 to $6 per barrel heads; leaf, 40 to 45 cents case; cucumbers, 50 cents to $1 dozen.

CUCUMBER CROPS.] =

The White Spine is probably the most productive of any strain of cucumbers grown under glass. Since cucumbers are quite dependent upon light, the largest yields occur in the spring or summer, when the sun is high, the days longer and the light more intense. In one house containing 460 plants set out April 1, there were picked between May 1 and August 25, 30,000 cucumbers, or an average of about sixty-five to a plant, which sold for 3 cents each. The plants were in good condition and bearing prolifically at the last named date. Another house containing 986 vines yielded from May to October 47,094 salable cucumbers, or an average of forty-seven to a plant. A larger yield would undoubtedly have been obtained in this house if fewer vines had been planted. A crop started June 19 and running to September gave an average of eighty-eight cucumbers per plant. One grower maintains that his spring and summer crop usually averages about ninety to a plant. In a house containing 200 plants 31,060 cucumbers were produced between June 1 and July 15, or an average of 155 cucumbers per plant. They brought from 2 to 7 cents each. W. W. Rawson, who plants cucumbers after two or three crops of winter lettuce, is said to produce 600,000 cucumbers per year. He picks about 2,000 per day in March, 4,000 in April, 10,000 in May and 15,000 in June. The largest picking he records is 50,000 in one day. It will be noticed that these records are all for spring and summer crops. The yield for fall and winter crops is much smaller. A fall and winter crop that will average twenty-five to fifty cucumbers per plant is a desirable one. The yield of individual plants is sometimes quite remarkable. In one instance 149 No. 1 cucumbers were picked from one plant. In another instance over 200 were picked from a single plant, twenty-one of which were picked on three consecutive days. The largest amount of fruit occurring in a single axil of which we have a record is six. Outdoor cucumbers for pickles are noted as great producers. The largest and best crop we saw last summer gave a yield of 102,700 pickle cucumbers from three acres as a result of two pickings during one week. —GEO. E. STONE, in bulletin of Hatch Experiment Station.

RHUBARB.

The forcing season for this article is about over, but the present is a good time to look after stock for another season. We have tried planting out the old, forced roots but find that they take so long to regain strength that it is cheaper to use fresh roots. The stronger these roots are the better article they will produce, so that the procuring of the proper class of stock is more than half the battle. Large clumps are never desirable for forcing purposes, as when they get too large the product is weaker, especially in the center of the clump, even outdoors when they are grown under natural conditions. The reason of this is easily observable, as the outside parts of the clump have freedom to send out its roots and seek nourishment, when the central crowns are hemmed in all around, hence the necessity of dividing when the clumps become too large. The size of the divisions may best be regulated by the space at command; if plenty of ground is at disposal I would consider it best to plant single crowns. These, if well cared for, will make strong plants for lifting to force in three years. If room is limited the plants could consist of two or three crowns, but should not be forced the first winter after transplanting. Two years' growth will make the plants much more profitable for forcing purposes.

A mistake is often made in planting the crowns too deep. They are deep rooters anyway and will soon find their way down, and where the soil is shallow should they reach the subsoil they are not only unable to procure food for the plant but are apt to rot. The crowns are better left even with the surface. All growth made by the plants the first season should be left so as to allow the plant to gain strength. The pulling of the stalks would have a weakening influence. The second year some of it might be pulled, if desired, but the less the better and under no circumstances should the plants be severely cut down.

Another means of propagation is by seeds. Some prefer this method rather than division, claiming that a stronger, more vigorous plant can be procured. It takes three years from the time of sowing the seeds to procure extra strong plants. We have forced it the second year but the results were not so satisfactory as when three-year-old plants were used. The seed should be sown in spring after the ground has become warm, say at the end of April or beginning of May. Sow thinly in rows two feet apart and thin out to about nine inches in the rows after the plants are well up. Transplant the following season, leaving them three feet apart each way and keep well cultivated. Rhubarb requires a good, rich soil and will amply repay for liberal manuring. Cold, damp situations should be avoided.

Of the several varieties in cultivation we prefer Victoria. It is a good, free grower, well flavored, crisp and highly colored, retaining good color even when forced. W. S. CROYDON.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. B. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THE continued backwardness of spring is getting serious.

THE onion set grower who knows the importance of early seeding is wondering where he will land.

SNOW fell at Chicago April 9,

THE week shows a little improvement over last week for counter trade, but it is far from what it should be.

THE market gardener is getting uneasy. If he cannot plow soon he will have to start building greenhouses.

NEWSPAPER reports are to the effect that the cantaloupe fields near Greeley, Colo., will approximate 2,000 acres this season.

ONION sets are cleaned up; orders during the week have had to be refused from lack of stock. The retail houses are just holding enough for counter trade.

AUGUST LEIBIUS, aged 75 years, died at Toledo, April 3. For some years he managed the branch of the Henry Phillips Seed and Implement Co., at Archbold, O.

SEED dealers at Boston report a very late counter trade season, but for the past two weeks they have been rushed to their limit. Frost is at last out of the ground and plowing and seed sowing in full swing.

BEAN contracting is slow work. The garden varieties are thought to be less hardy than the white navy bean and if the farmer cannot get the variety he wants, it is hard to get him to take the variety the seedsman wants to give him.

PROGRESS in making arrangements with farmers who grow seeds on contract is nearly at a standstill. The outlook for the good start which they usually depend on for success in seed growing is so poor that some of the best growers are afraid to take hold.

AT points in the vicinity of Chicago and those of the same latitude east and west the seedsman is likely to lose the sale of at least one sowing of spinach, radish and similar early crops. The gardener will not be able to plant anything this year until the usual time for a second sowing is at hand.

The Market.

The latter part of Easter week was all that could be asked for as to weather. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were showery—on Thursday the sun came out and we have had beautiful weather ever since. Business for Easter was about the same as that of last year, no special rush anywhere and plenty of stock to fill all requirements. Lilies sold well and there were plenty to be had. The stores retailed them at from $4 to $6 per dozen stems and plants in pot at $1 each, although some extra large stems in 7-inch pots retailed at $1.50 each. Azaleas sold well in 6 and 7-inch pots at $2 to $3 each. Roses were not overplentiful and sold at fair prices. Carnations were in good supply except whites and they wholesaled at $3 and $4 per 100. A few growers had patches of Empress daffodils and easily disposed of them at $1.50 per 100. Narcissus poeticus at $1 per 100 and valley at $3 to $4, were eagerly bought up. Some white lilac both in pots and from the open was shown in the larger stores and quantities of cherry and pear blossoms helped keep up the show. All sorts of evergreen stuff sold well and we have an ocean of it at this time. Calla lilies were used for church decorations by the thousands and sold wholesale at $1 per 100. Spiræas in pots sold wholesale at from $6 to $9 per dozen. Take it as a whole, business was up to the usual Easter mark and all the growers I have seen were well pleased with their sales and the retailers with only a few exceptions seem to be satisfied.

Various Notes.

During Easter week Sievers & Boland had by far the largest and most artistic show of flowers and plants in town. Their windows were a center of attraction and their big trade well justified the trouble this enterprising firm goes to, to keep them up.

F. Shibeley had a very busy Easter. He handles nothing but first-class stock and does a good shipping business as well as conducting one of the largest retail stores in town.

Some complaint was made that many of the Easter lilies delivered in pots had been only transplanted in them a few hours, being taken from boxes and staked up for the occasion. They did not hold their heads up well, in many instances not being sufficiently established to stand the change of temperature from the greenhouse to the store. The plants came from the Japanese growers entirely, I am told. G.

A CALIFORNIA OPPORTUNITY

Owing to death and the settlement of an estate one-half of the stock of the Leedham Bulb Co., Santa Cruz, Cal., is to be sold. It is preferred that this interest pass to a practical man who can devote his full time to the business. Cash to the amount of $2000 is required. The business is in good shape and can be largely developed. This is a splendid opportunity for the right man. The land controlled by the company is ideal soil for bulb growing. Plenty of water. Climate the best on the Pacific Coast. The property of the company has been examined by the editor of the Florists' Review and he has expressed the belief that there is a great future for the business.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

THE Rochester district reports nursery shipments fully a month late.

C. M. HARRISON will close out his nursery at Glasgow, Mo., and remove to a fruit farm in Saline county.

THE Johnson Orchard and Nursery Co., of Dallas, Tex., has increased its capital from $10,000 to $20,000.

W. T. HARRIS, formerly with Youngers & Co., at Geneva, Neb., is starting in the nursery business at Black Foot, Idaho.

IN smoky cities the planting of the London plane tree, Platanus orientalis, is recommended. It endures conditions fatal to most large growing trees.

IN the Westchester, Pa., district larger forces than ever before employed are digging stock and shipments are going forward with celerity as a short season is feared.

L. R. TAFT, of Agricultural College, Mich., has been tendered the appointment as chairman of awards for the horticultural department at the St. Louis World's Fair.

THE Werick Bros. Co., at Cheektowaga, N. Y., has been incorporated with $7,000 capital to do a general nursery business. The incorporators are E. W., C. H. and H. P. Werick, of Buffalo.

A NOVELTY in the advertising line is a card sent out by the Peterson Nursery, Chicago. It is intended to go in the buyers' card index and gives concise information as to the stock offered by the advertiser.

AN authority estimates that there are now 1,800 peach orchards in Georgia and that approximately a million trees will bear this year, with a prospect of shipments this season aggregating 5,000 cars. The best previous year was 1898 with 2,500 cars.

BELATED NURSERY STOCK.

The Sloterdike, from Rotterdam to New York, arrived April 7 with a large consignment of nursery stock, aggregating 819 packages. The stock left Holland March 12 on the Statendam, which broke down, and the cargo was transhipped. The manifest showed horticultural wares as follows:

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Easter business was very satisfactory. Cut flowers of all kinds sold well, violets taking the lead; thousands more could have been disposed of. Carnations sold at $4 to $6 per 100, or as high as $1.50 per dozen retail for fancies. There was a good call also for pot plants, especially azaleas and lilies. Since Easter everything has been very quiet, so there is quite a little stuff left over, but it is cleaned up every day by the Greek at the four corners.

G. Bennett reports a small loss since the thaw as water got into one of his greenhouses and flooded his violets. He will build one more carnation house this season, 26 x 150. He grows for J. B. Keller's Sons and expects to be able to cut all they can use next season.

C. Fry reports business very satisfactory. He has a good many houses devoted to carnations and gives his foreman, G. Faust, entire charge and it is run in the best of shape, as they have had heavy cuts all winter. He will build another house 30 x 200 feet.

Ed. Brockman picked over 2,000 Lawson carnations from 1,300 plants for Easter, which he sold at $5 per 100.

Indianapolis!

Was there at the finish

When most of the other varieties were rapidly going to sleep, Indianapolis held up in splendid shape. There are two reasons for this. Indianapolis is a splendid keeper and we have not overfed nor overforced our stock. Our vase of 200 blooms was not entered for competition, that's why you did not see it mentioned among the prize winners, but it made a host of friends. We still have about 10,000 for March delivery. Fine healthy cuttings that will make fine stock for next winter's flowering. Will make you more money than any other pink carnation. Order at once. $2.50 per doz., $12.00 per 100, $100 per 1000.

BAUR & SMITH,

330 West 38th Street, - INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

TOPEKA, KANS.—James Hayes says lilies could hardly have been in finer shape than they were for Easter. Business was very brisk. Potted plants sold well but the increase seemed to be mostly on cut flowers.

READING, PA.—H. J. Huesmann says that this was the best Easter on record. Lilies were the popular item and ranged in price from 15 to 20 cents a bloom. Hoskin & Giles, who have two establishments, also report a big business. Church decoration was a leading feature of the work.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Jacob Thinnies, of 245 De Kalb avenue, died of apoplexy while sitting at a card table at his club. He was 64 years of age and a native of Germany. His wife, two sons and a daughter survive.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—The old game of the palm swindler was worked on W. T. Hempstead one evening just before Easter. A stranger ordered cut flowers and plants delivered at the address of a customer, met the delivery wagon and secured the stock, the customer knowing nothing about the transaction.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

We have a twenty horse-power tubular boiler 10x3 feet with twenty-six 3-inch flues. This is at present heating two even-span greenhouses each 20x100 feet, or about 5,000 feet of glass. The overhead flow in each house is 2½-inch and there are two coils of seven 1½-inch returns in each house. Hot water is used and 50 degrees required at night in coldest weather. How much more glass will this boiler heat? L. F.

The boiler in question will easily heat one more house 20x100 feet with the same minimum night temperature during the coldest weather. L. C. C.

"IT IS TO LAUGH."

From a tiny plant sprung from a seed found on the mummy of an Egyptian warrior, who lived a thousand years before the Christian era, and which is now being nurtured in the florist shop of M. A. Bowe, at No. 1294 Broadway, is expected to spring one of the rarest flowers in the world. The seed was given the florist by Col. F. Foster Milliken, the lawyer, clubman and traveler. He obtained it in Egypt twenty years ago, where it had been found in the wrappings of the mummy of Os-Ra, a celebrated warrior of the twenty-second dynasty, who died 945 B. C.

The above appeared in one of the New York evening newspapers whose daily circulation is "very near a million copies." Imagine the interested crowds that gathered to see the wonderful little plant in the florist's window. Rockefeller's violets are not in it with the Egyptian novelty of "B. C. 945."

A GERMAN, M. Peterseims, of Erfurt, has a "wonderful pig," like a fern ball only made of terra cotta. The body is furrowed and agrostis is sown in the furrows and the pig filled with water. Soon the grass begins to grow and the pig is shortly "covered with a green fur, which, to the delight of the owner, becomes thicker day by day."

MID-SEASON SHRUBS.

Would like to get names of a few shrubs which bloom between early spiraea, Magnolia Linnei and the later spiraeas, Deutzia scabra and others.
F. J. U.

Three beautiful shrubs known to all, which gladden our hearts in spring, make our residence streets charming and drive away dull care, are Pyrus japonica, with its scarlet blossoms; Forsythia viridissima, and, better still, Fortunei, and Spiraea prunifolia, often called the bridal wreath. Then follow a great variety of flowering shrubs, the lilacs, the viburnums, berberis, both the green and purple-leaved; the yellow-flowered corchorus, the flowering currants, Tartarian honeysuckle, exochorda, philadelphus (mock orange), weigelas, Hydrangea paniculata, several spiraeas, Anthony Waterer one of the best; and where they thrive, the magnificent rhododendrons, azaleas and kalmias. All the above are hardy in our most northern states, and beautiful, and the list might be considerably extended to a late but beautiful shrub, or it may be called a dwarf tree, the althaea. The newer double-flowered varieties of this are most beautiful. If F. J. U. wants the exact date of their flowering, send to one of the leading nurserymen for his retail catalogue, which will tell you height, color and season of flowering of each species and variety.

NEW ROSES

Cardinal and Enchantress

Read testimonials from two of the largest growers in Washington who have bought a large number of plants after seeing them growing at my place.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1904.

Your new rose Cardinal came duly to hand and we firmly believe it will have a great future, and will certainly be a money maker as it is in a class all to itself, being superior in form and habit to anything that we have as yet seen. Your new rose Enchantress we also think will be a great money maker, judging from its profuse blooming quality, as we have seen it several times in mid-winter. It cannot help being a winner. Wishing you ever success, we remain,
Yours truly,
A. GUDE & BRO.

American Rose Co., 909 F St., N. W., WASHINGTON, March 17, 1904.

DEAR SIR: We gave all the show possible to Enchantress and Cardinal, placing them in our window with placards telling what they were. They kept a week, retaining their brilliant color to the last. Cardinal was as full of perfume the day its petals dropped as when it was first cut. The roses are both matchless, and we believe destined to outclass all roses of their color for forcing under glass.
Very sincerely yours,
AMERICAN ROSE CO., per B. D.

SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.—Easter trade was good, both at the Hartman and Merrill greenhouses, stocks being pretty well cleaned up.

SYCAMORE, ILL.—Easter trade was about ten per cent better than last year and Wm. Swinbank says that if it ever comes spring business promises to be better than last year.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.—E. O. Lovell reports a splendid Easter trade, cleaning up everything in cut flowers with an opportunity to have sold more had the stock been available. Pot plants also went well. The total sales were twenty-five per cent ahead of last year. Since Easter funeral work has been in demand and stock for social affairs has been in demand.

TO-BAK-INE

FUMIGATING PAPER.

SCARBOROUGH, N. Y., February 3, 1904.
 "We wish to say that your To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Paper is the most satisfactory agent for the destruction of Green fly that has ever been brought to our notice. It is clean, quickly applied and effective. As you know, we have been heavy buyers of this product, all of which has been used in our own greenhouses. And as 'actions speak louder than words' we think no further recommendation on our part is necessary."

CLEVELAND.

The Saturday before Easter is always a notable occasion at the Sheriff street market, where some very large displays of stock are made. Each year the management offers three prizes, of $15, $10 and $5, to the florist who makes the best exhibition. This season the first prize was awarded to G. M. Nauman, as it has been every year but one since the practice was inaugurated. The second prize went to S. M. Pentecost and the third to F. C. Burger.

HEATING.

In piping a greenhouse for heating with water it is generally recommended to carry a large flow pipe to the extreme end of the house and there enter the coil of smaller pipes forming the return. I have used this system of arranging pipes but have always found the extreme end of the house much warmer than the end near the boiler. As a remedy I have thought it might be best to reverse matters, letting the small pipes carry the flow in a downward course to the farthest end and collect and return through the large pipe, placing it below the coil instead of above. This would divide the water and cause a more rapid radiation at the beginning of the flow. Will you kindly advise me in this matter and give the results of actual tests if any have been made.

F. A. H.

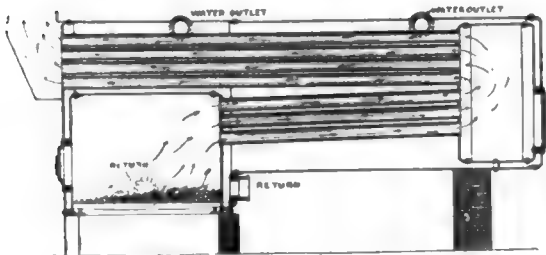

I know of no experiment in which the heating pipes have been arranged in the manner described. I am skeptical regarding the outcome of the modification suggested, for if with the present arrangement the end nearest the boiler is too cool it is evident the radiating coils are too long for the rate of flow. If the system were to be reversed and the flow reduced by the friction through the small pipes to the far end of the house I fear the result would be that the far end of the house would be even colder than the end near the boiler is now. It would be safer to place a short relay coil in the end of the house near the boiler if too cool, rather than to attempt to equalize the temperature by reversing the system.

AVON, N. Y.—The Erie railroad has decided to go out of the gardening business and will not plant its station grounds in the future. The greenhouses here were established twenty years ago in charge of James Sutcliffe, who has managed the works ever since. He has purchased the stock now in the greenhouses and as soon as he has sold it out they will be torn down.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler."

Yours truly, Treanor & Rettig.

THE MOST VALUABLE VIOLET TO GROW.....

WHILE DOUBLE VIOLETS have been "dumped" in the leading cities, good singles have been bringing good returns to the grower. The popularity of this Violet is astonishing. I have sold in the city of Boston this winter 1,300,000 blooms without having to make any sacrifice. You can do the same if you have good stock. You cannot afford to have poor stock. I have simply the best stock in the country. I will send out in May strong, transplanted stock for which I am now booking orders at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000. 500 at 1000 rate.

WILLIAM SIM, Cliftondale, Mass.

AFTER - EASTER BARGAINS!

After Easter all Florists need to replenish their stock. We here offer some exceptionally fine bargains. If you cannot take care of your needs now, you had better place your order and have us hold same for you until you can use the plants. In this way you are sure of having your stock secured when you need it, and avoid the usual disappointment of "Stock sold" when you need it.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Use of Cold Frames and Hotbeds.

From now till the end of May all our firms that deal in bedding plants will be gradually growing more congested and every week will see them seeking more space for the rapid growth of the soft-wooded plants at this time of year. In the torpid and hibernating winter-time all nature takes a rest and when the melting snows are welcomed by mother earth and the blue bird and robin tell us with melody that spring is with us again, then also takes place a most marvelous division and subdivision of the protoplasm and then, again, the poet sings:

A young man's fancy lightly turns
To thoughts of—soft boiled eggs.

Some ancient scribe said that in the springtime the young man's fancy turned to love. He was partly wrong. The young man, and the old man ditto, is, and always will be, susceptible of love at any time of year, and the writer has experienced that the lower the quicksilver in the thermometer the higher was the warmth of his whole being and his ardent wish to do a fellow being a good turn.

This is, however, not what I was intending to say, except that when spring comes there is a marvelous awakening of all nature. But it is not marvelous simply because it is nature. If the awakening began in the fall it would be marvelous, but we intelligent beings have sufficient appreciation that it is good and blessed. If we were born to exist in steam heat we should think that was blessed. The Eskimo thinks there is no climate like the frigid north. The European born in Calcutta or Ceylon, when on a visit to temperate Europe, pines to return to his or her native torrid zone, and so you have the whole world satisfied.

And Now to Business.

I don't relish descending from philosophy to cultural notes of our common plants, but I must. You can help your crowded houses very much by the judicious use of cold frames and, better still, by hotbeds. Before the widespread use of hot water or steam-heated houses for the forcing of early vegetables, the hotbeds were made great use of and were a most important aid in that branch of gardening. I do not advocate any such laborious arrangements as those that a vegetable grower of thirty years ago used to practice, when he began to collect his material in February and early in March started his lettuce or cucumbers and for many succeeding weeks had to keep a most vigilant care of them.

But I do believe in a foot or eighteen inches of well trodden down stable manure, with five or six inches of loam over it, as a grand place for several of our important bedding plants for the month of May. Stable manure is as good as anything. If leaves of the last fall are mixed with it, well and good, and, if your neighbors don't object, there is no fermenting material better than refuse hops from a brewery.

What to Put in Hotbeds.

We seldom make use of these hotbeds before May 1, about the time we feel the greatest need of more bench room. There is something about the condition of a mild hotbed that makes many plants actually jump, but not all plants need that stimulant. What to put there and what to keep in the houses is the question. Broadly speaking, plants that want a high temperature and which are slow to grow without it are those that should go into the hotbed. I know of no soft-wooded plants that would not be greatly accelerated in their growth by being plunged in the warm like the zonale geranium, should not go into a hotbed, for it would make their growth so rank that they would be very unfit plants for any flower gardening purpose.

There is not only a blessing in relieving your crowded benches in the use of these primitive greenhouses, but you have the great advantage of removing the sash entirely on warm days, so that the plants become inured to the freer air and sun, which they will have to endure in a few weeks.

The Cold Frame.

The cold frame is also a most valuable help at this time of year, and not half as much made use of as it might be. Any plant that will grow and thrive in a night temperature of 50 degrees will do very well in a cold frame after May 1. Where is there a better place for tea or hybrid tea roses that have been dormant or nearly so all winter? Now you want to grow them along slowly before planting out.

I don't think I am intruding on either east or west carnationists, all glory to them, when I say that there will be more houses of carnations planted this year with plants that never saw the field than ever before. It is coming, material of a hotbed, but with many it may force a growth that would unfit them for future use. I have in mind several plants that are by no means tropical and yet when the fires are let out in May and perhaps the glass made opaque with whitewash, just linger and stunt.

In the month of May I would put into these hotbeds, alternantheras, acalyphas, coleus, tuberous-rooted begonias, iresine and, among the colder-blooded plants the variegated geraniums, verbenas, lemon verberna, mignonette, heliotrope and others will occur to you. Plants of a strong, succulent nature, and many leading growers will not put a plant in the field. They will keep them in 3 or 4-inch pots till the end of May or June and then plant them on the bench, or, better still, beds, and now is not the cold frame a great essential in this case? It is the only place for them.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

GIANT ANTIRRHINUM.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of some remarkable snapdragons grown by John Breitmeyer's Sons at Mt. Clemens, Mich., and cut April 14. They have them in three colors, white, yellow and pink, the latter being rather the best all around. They are cutting about 150 a day, some of them four feet long with the flowers proportionately large and covering fully a foot of the stem. Philip Breitmeyer says that at retail they readily bring $3 to $4 a dozen.

ROSES.

Seasonable Reminders.

With warm weather and increased intensity of sunshine, young stock will require more attention and care. They should be carefully guarded against any approach to becoming pot bound and, as planting time is also approaching, due calculation should be made to do the potting so that the roots will be at the right stage at benching time. Plants to be in proper planting condition should be at least three weeks in the last shift. This prevents the disastrous effects of having the balls go to pieces during the planting process.

Watering and syringing must be strictly and frequently attended to, so as to prevent the tender roots from being injured by the strong sunshine.

It is rare to find a house in which there are no defects in the glass, and these are certain to cause blistering of the tender leaves if not attended to. These defects should be located as early in the season as possible, as burns caused by them have a very debilitating effect. Select a bright day when the burning spots can be most easily detected, and touch them with either a solution of alum or very thin white lead and oil. It does not require a big splotch of paint, which is very unsightly, to remedy these defects.

Beauty foliage, even on the old plants is very liable to become blotched and as the most valuable leaves are above the line of sight, much damage may be done before it is noticed if a careful inspection is not practiced.

Preparations for planting should now be made by getting the soil into the proper condition and having all tools, etc., in good order. The work of that busy season will be greatly expedited by having all supplies, such as lumber, nails and all other necessities, in stock and in their proper place, so that no time may be wasted in getting the benches repaired, filled and planted. RIBES.

WALSH'S ROSES.

One of the accompanying reproductions from photographs shows a portion of the magnificent group of Rambler roses staged at the recent spring exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society in Boston by M. H. Walsh, Woods Hole, Mass., the other a well bloomed plant of the variety Lady Gay. The latter is a seedling from Crimson Rambler and is of a delicate cherry pink color, foliage glossy and deep green. All the varieties shown in this remarkable group were of Mr. Walsh's own raising and attest his wonderful skill as a rose hybridizer. We hope Mr. Walsh may be able to put up a similar group in 1905, when the American Rose Society comes to Boston. Some of the varieties shown will be very popular as Easter plants when better known. In the way of foliage they are mostly superior to Crimson Rambler. W. N. CRAIG.

POT GROWN CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

[An essay by George B. Windler, read before the St. Louis Florists' Club, April 14, 1904.]

When I took upon myself the task of writing an essay on pot grown chrysanthemums I knew that there are men in our club who are more able to do so than I am. I also knew that some will think my effort is of little value; nevertheless I felt at that time, and I feel that way now, that every member of an organization or club like ours should endeavor to do something along these lines to bring on discussion and in that way exchange ideas. That, in my opinion, is what we are organized for. If the ideas of an essayist are faulty or not practical, then the members, who, by experience or some other channel, know better, should criticize and criticize freely. That is what brings life into our meetings.

As we grow chrysanthemums in pots, naturally we have no bench plants to take cuttings from. We keep a few pot plants, as many as we need, of each variety for stock. These are cut down to the ground and the young sprouts that appear by this time are cleaned off, that is, all bad leaves are removed. Then they are put into a house with a temperature of about 50 degrees Fahrenheit. By January we have a crop of cuttings to take off, which we usually dip into tobacco water to kill those little black bugs which every chrysanthemum grower knows.

Root them in clean sand with a temperature of about 60 degrees. This first batch of cuttings is the best one to grow in pots all summer, if you grow them that way. When rooted start them in 2-inch pots in about the same temperature. When they are well established you can place them in a cold frame. From then on, shift and pinch out as they need it. As soon as all danger of frost is past, plunge them out into the open ground. Have them in their flowering pots by the first of August. On about this date they should also be pinched the last time.

Keep them growing there until the buds show, then remove them to the greenhouse. Plants grown in this way are handled much easier, as far as supports are concerned, than those grown in the field. A plant in a 6-inch pot grown this way can be supported with four canes (bamboo canes we use) encircled with silkline very nicely; whereas with field grown plants you will need a cane for nearly every flower stem to get the plant into a symmetrical shape. Disbud as soon as you can handle the buds. Plenty of water, good ventilation and a light house are essential to the growing of good pot plant chrysanthemums. After their buds show, liquid feeding about every ten days is beneficial. On most varieties you must discontinue feeding when they show color.

For chrysanthemums grown in the field for pot plants the young stock is handled practically the same way as those grown in pots all summer; the one difference is that you can take a very young or small plant at planting-out time, so long as it is healthy, and still get quite a large plant by the time you want to lift them, which should be done no later than September 1.

Keep the soil in the field well pulverized by cultivating frequently and pinch back as they need it until the beginning of August. When lifted they should be shaded until root action begins anew. And this is the time when they trouble one most; if you don't water enough they will wilt; if you water them too much they will get sick roots, and in either case they will lose their lower leaves. Keep a close watch on them when they undergo the change from field to pot.

CARNATION NOTES. - WEST.

We have been ready to begin planting in the field for a couple of weeks already, but it seems to be very slow in warming up. During the past week we have had as much as ten degrees of frost and very few nights without some frost. While these conditions prevail there is no need of beginning to plant out unless your stock has been hardened off extra well, which in most instances, we do not find to be the case. Most growers grow their young stock in the same houses with the blooming plants, and the young plants are at this time in a good growing condition and hardly in shape to stand six or eight degrees of frost. I would rather wait a week longer and not have my plants exposed to any such dangers. If you are afraid that you will be late in finishing, you can very easily put a few extra hands to help on the job when you do begin. It is a job that should be done as quickly as possible anyway, so use every available man.

A little system will help to facilitate matters, if you have several men and boys helping on the job. For instance, detail a man and one or more boys to dump the young plants out of the pots as fast as they are needed. The man should be thoroughly familiar with your stock, as you may have two or three batches of one variety, and, of course, you want to plant all of a kind together as far as possible. This man will know that if a batch is a little dry they should have a good watering, so they will not only come out of the pots easier, but they will not dry out so quickly while being planted. Don't have them standing out in the sun too long before planting, but rather keep them in the shed after knocking them out of the pots and take them out as they are needed.

Have a boy to each planter to drop the plants for him, and see that he does not get too far ahead of him. He can stay just far enough ahead of the planter so that the planter will not have to wait for him while he changes his empty box for a full one, brought to him by another boy who wheels them out as they are needed.

We use a line to plant by and use a trowel in planting. There are many advantages in using a trowel, and, in fact, we think it is almost impossible to do good planting without a trowel. If your soil is extra well pulverized and quite mellow you can perhaps dispense with it, but we find that while in some spots the soil will be fine and mellow, in other spots it will be lumpy or perhaps the horse trod just where the plant should be set. Then again, if the day is warm and the plowing was done a few days previous, the soil at the surface will be quite dry and with a trowel with a few jerks you can bring enough nice, moist soil to the surface to set the plant in. After setting the plant in and pressing the soil around it, be sure and cover the firmed soil with a half-inch of fine, loose soil. This will prevent evaporation and baking of the soil. For the same reason each evening you should go over what was planted that day with the cultivator between the rows.

These hints apply equally well whether you plant in beds or just in rows across the field. We plant in rows one after another until we reach the other side of the lot. The plants are set about eight to ten inches apart in the row and the rows are set from fifteen to eighteen inches apart. We like this way for many reasons, too numerous to mention, but under certain conditions the bed method may have some advantages; particularly in a wet season and on clayey soil where the water does not soak away readily.

Be sure you use good sized labels to mark the varieties. The loss of a label may mean a big loss to you sometimes, especially if you are not a carnation expert and able to tell at a glance what a variety is without looking at the label. Some men have this faculty developed to a wonderful degree, while others are good growers but unable to see the distinguishing marks of the different varieties unless they see a bloom. The seedling raiser knows how to appreciate this advice.

Don't plant out any plants that are not in good condition, especially of the standard varieties. A poor, diseased plant will stand a poor show of making a first-class plant that will produce prize-winning blooms. One may be excused if he has some plants of a novelty that are not strictly first-class. Most of the novelties have behaved well so far, but one variety is so covered with rust that it will be a wonder if they make good plants by August. One other has shown a tendency toward stem-rotting, but we hope to lose no more, now that we know it must be guarded against.

If you have some in the sand yet, don't plant them from the sand to the field, but pot them into small pots and leave them to be planted last. Two or three weeks in pots will do them lots of good and they will suffer less when planted out. Of course, your main stock is well established in pots by this time, but you may have a few late cuttings of a seedling or a variety you bought last year, of which you want all you can get.

ANTS ON CARNATIONS.

Can you tell me of something that will destroy ants? We are having trouble with them in our greenhouses, especially on carnations. J. A. F.

I think you can destroy the ants in the same manner that you destroy sow bugs. They like sugar and if you add some kind of poison like Paris green to the sugar and lay it around where they travel they will get some of it. I know of no other method, although there may be one better than the above.

A DENVER DISPLAY.

The accompanying illustrations are reproductions from photographs taken in the store of the Scott Floral Co., at Denver, just before Easter. This is a young firm, but they have done a most flourishing business from the start. They handled an immense stock at Easter and cleaned out better than even their own sanguine expectations. One of the pictures shows the interior of the store and the working force, the other shows the window as it appeared from inside the store. The window displays were changed daily during the week and were a great advertisement, attracting much attention from the passers-by. One of their best windows was composed entirely of azaleas, two of the specimens being probably the largest ever shown in Denver. A. E. M.

EASTER IN NEW YORK.

[The following is an essay by J. Austin Shaw, read before the New York Florists' Club, April 11.]

The honor of reading a paper on any subject before the New York Florists' Club is one that cannot fail to win the appreciation of the fortunate member selected. The unhappy possibility of inability to write a paper that will keep the members awake or hold them in their seats is, however, a serious consideration. If you add to this the fact that one's subject is selected for him, and his time is limited, and he writes under the watchful dictatorship of your honorable committee, you will realize how I approach the responsibility with fear and trembling. If I had been permitted to choose my own text I think I could have given you a more interesting discourse on, say, "The experiences of a horticultural drummer within and beyond the Rocky Mountains," or "The retail nursery business and the modern method of selling through agents, that in the last thirty years has made this country bud and blossom as the rose," or, more interesting still, "How a florist secured perfect health and a renewal of his youth by fasting and made doctors and sickness unnecessary evils."

On these and a few other themes I could have given you the results of personal experiences that would have provided food for afterthought, but the president and his lieutenants were unapproachable; they would not even allow me to read from my book of unpublished and unpublishable poems. And so I accepted the inevitable and you will have to make the best of what I have learned, and experienced, and think of "Easter Business in New York." You will observe I am not handicapped by the mention of any year, though I imagine your committee intended to confine me to 1904. Fortunately for me this omission widened my legitimate scope and gave me a field thirty or forty years wide in which to roam.

A word or two concerning Easter itself may not prove uninteresting here. As you all remember, the controversy as to the proper time to celebrate the festival began some 1,700 years ago. The eastern and western churches disagreed. It took centuries to settle the matter. If the New York Club had been umpire we would have had it every Sunday for about nine months and rested the other three, or else have cut it out altogether. However, it's too late to butt in now. The eastern Christians celebrated on the fourteenth day of the first Jewish month and the western churches on the Sunday after the fourteenth day. Religious controversy was just as lively in those days as now, though on a smaller scale. It was just 322 years ago that a definite conclusion was arrived at, a moveable Easter decided upon, and always a Sunday after March 21. Never can it arrive after April 25, but it will be celebrated at that late date in 1943 and there is no good reason why some of us here should not live to participate in its wonderful development. If time permitted I would love to tell you of Easter, 1943. Perhaps the club may request me to read a paper on that occasion. Who can tell? Some of us will be here and all of us will be somewhere.

It is not the astronomical moon, but an imaginary one that regulates the time of Easter's advent. The calendar new moon follows the real one sometimes two or three days. Easter is always the first Sunday after the paschal full moon which happens on or next after March 21. If the full moon happens on a Sunday, then Easter is the Sunday after. If these data overwhelm you, the commissary department will gladly see that you are in the same condition as the moon. The arrangement as to the calendar moon was made so that the Jewish Passover and Easter might fall on different days. Occasionally they of necessity get together. This was the case in 1903 and will again be in 1923. But that needn't worry us. What interests you is to know that Easter will never be as early as March 22 in this century and that next year it arrives on a very late train, April 23.

Easter is, after all, the celebration of the reawakening of nature, the season of the world's rejoicing. Long before the Christian era the old world had set aside a day to celebrate the beginning of the year's productiveness. Easter is the original name, a name given in honor of the pagan goddess, called by the Teutons Ostara and by the Anglo Saxons Eastre, a personification of returning life and light. The adoption of the egg, the symbol of new life, also antedates the Christian era. So through all the ages Easter has marked the annual resurrection of nature. To those of the Christian faith it is especially significant. To all of us this year it has been particularly welcome. From our standpoint, long may it continue a great church festival, enhanced in its celebration and its beauty more and more by the products of our profession.

Some of you remember Easter in New York nearly forty years ago. Then Wednesday was the all-important day of the week in preparation for Holy Thursday, the great day of the Catholic church, which at that time was the principal if not the only celebrant, especially in the use of plants, the Episcopal church using none and no floral celebration of any kind being used by any of the other religious denominations.

The plants in those days were stock gillys, Deutzia gracilis, Spiraea japonica, pyrethrum (white feather), the hardy Azalea Fielder's White, Azalea alba and Narcissiflora, the latter still occasionally seen. Those were the days when the calla lily reigned supreme, their value 30 cents to 40 cents a flower, and $1 to $3 a plant. For Easter Sunday the flat bouquets were made on frames in the old style, as some of you can recall, and with these the altars were decorated. There were few roses in those days. The only large flower was the camellia. Lycopodium was the background for the bouquets. There were few palms, Caryota urens, the fishtail; the chamaerops and a few latanias. Large crosses, anchors, harps and similar designs aided in the church decorations. In those days Henry Siebrecht began his Easter experiences in New York and Alex McConnell grew Neapolitan violets, double pink camellias, Safrano and Isabella Sprunt roses. To these gentlemen I am indebted for many reliable reminiscences of the long ago. Leach, of Astoria, was the king grower of that time, his list including smilax, stock gillys, callas, deutzias and sweet alyssum.

It was not until the early '80s that the long-stemmed flowers arrived; then appeared Lilium Harrisii. Imported azaleas were next in evidence, followed by rhododendrons, metrosideros, etc. Cut flowers became a factor about 1870, the red carnation, La Purite; the white, Dograw; the variegated, Astoria, and the large white, Louise Zeller. Then came violets, Wiegand Bros. of West Hoboken, and Leuly, being the first growers of the popular flower. In 1875 the man whose Easter business amounted to $1,000 was the talk of the town. Only during the last fifteen years has the plant trade been an important part of the Easter business. The increase has been gradual, each year being better than the last, until now it is high tide, a condition which abundant space and perfect system will perpetuate. As one prominent retailer expresses it: "There are endless possibilities for those who are alert, energetic and enterprising."

The wholesale Easter business in cut flowers began in 1872. John J. Perkins was one of the pioneers and not until 1885, he tells me, did Easter amount to much in this now important department of the floricultural business. Away back twenty-two years ago, in 1882, Bon Silene brought 20 cents at wholesale and Catherine Mermet 65 cents. New Year's then was the "great day of the feast." Lamarque and Jaqu were worth a dollar each and Cornella, Cook the same. Callas were sometimes pickled sixty days to meet the demand and were then "the only pebble on the beach." After all perhaps we have said too harsh things of the picklers of 1903 and '04. Fortunately for the business, however, the preserving process is now out of date and the fact of its almost complete cessation this year attests its unpopularity. The goose that laid the golden eggs has come to life again. May she never die!

And now what can I say of this Easter in New York which you do not already know? Compared with the past it is a giant hardly recognizable. Steadily it has grown through all the years until now it encircles and dominates the whole wide earth. And it will grow and will always be the great floral festival of the world. You are young? Prepare for its growth and grow with it. Plan alertly and carefully so that the consummation may be so much of a success the rest of the year may be "velvet" for every one of you—grower, wholesaler and retailer. It is your right.

I know something of what Easter means to every branch of our profession. To the grower the long days and nights of toil and anxiety; of exposure to the elements; of uncertainty as to the perfect development of plant and flower in due season; the calculating to a day almost the completion of the work that must meet the inevitable demand; the uncertainty of the fickle weather god; the possibilities of coal strikes, floods, hail storms, cyclones and fires; of neglectful and inefficient helpers; of the work of a year being swept away almost in the twinkling of an eye. Surely you, the foundation of all that follows, deserve all that a benign providence and the great middle agency through whom your success has largely developed can honestly return you as your fair and legitimate share; and I believe you get it. May your prosperity increase. You are everywhere now, but the world is growing. But the field can never be so large that you can fully cover it. Our own New York has nearly touched the four-million mark; it will soon be the largest city in the world, but you will never grow more than it will need. Its artistic taste is spreading with its growth. The love for the beautiful is in every soul. Not a heart in all its vast expanse but responds to the perfume and loveliness of a flower. It is not for me to advise you what to grow to meet the ever increasing demand; your own experience and intelligence are your best teachers and they have already told you that nothing can be done too well to practically appeal to the appreciation of Easter in New York.

And you wholesale florists, what has Easter in New York been to you through all these more than thirty years? You who have demonstrated your necessity and by your tact and energy have added a thousand-fold to the prosperity of the grower, and covered the wide land with glass thereby until every hamlet has its greenhouse and the reflection from the sea of crystal can be seen from every hilltop! Your path has not been and is not all roses. You have established centers of distribution through which the retail business of this city has been developed to its present wonderful proportions and by your system only could such results have been accomplished. I know much of your faithfulness to duty, your watchful devotion to your growers' interests, your promptness, your generosity, your frequent sacrifice of self that those who entrust their welfare to your care may be content. And I believe you are appreciated more and more as your value and necessity are realized. Time seems to be with you an after consideration. I never hear you complain of long hours and I have seen you hustling often through the livelong night. Where would the retail florist business be without you? A pigmy gasping for existence! In such a city as ours your value, your power, your necessity are dovetailed into the growing and retailing departments of the trade so thoroughly, so harmoniously that you are a fixture as long as plants grow and flowers bloom. And you deserve to be; we cannot do without you.

And you retailers. What does Easter in New York mean to you, for you have my especial sympathy more than any other branch of floriculture. I know of your early rising, your lack of rest and sleep, your twenty-four-hour experiences, your conflict with the fickle public, the risks you have to run in purchasing and trusting, the lack of facilities for extraordinary occasions, and the danger of catastrophe when, after placing your entire possessions on the turn of the climatic wheel, one little vagary of the skies may sweep them and yourselves into oblivion. You deserve, as President Traendly would express it, "all that's coming to you," and this year you got it. After all you are the balance wheel of the whole combination. Where would the wholesaler and the grower be without you? Your beautiful stores are the pride of the city and the finest in the world. You display the wares of the growers and the distributions of the wholesalers so artistically that you are irresistible. Yours are the real risks and commend your enterprise and bravery and faith to all. You have created and made enduringly possible an Easter in New York. Yours has been the skill that has developed decorative art, in ribbon, and basket, and hamper, in harmony of color, in quality of design and perfect blending of variety, until now the whole country looks to New York for new conceptions in ornamentation and novelties in plant and flower arrangement. And so Easter of 1904 is deservedly your banner Easter and none congratulate you more heartily than the wholesalers and the growers who made senior. After all perhaps we have said too much things of the picklers of 1903 and '04. Fortunately for the business, however, the preserving process is now out of date and the fact of its almost complete cessation this year attests its unpopularity. The goose that laid the golden eggs has come to life again. May she never die!

And now what can I say of this Easter in New York which you do not already know? Compared with the past it is a giant hardly recognizable. Steadily it has grown through all the years until now it encircles and dominates the whole wide earth. And it will grow and will always be the great floral festival of the world. You are young? Prepare for its growth and grow with it. Plan alertly and carefully so that the consummation may be so much of a success the rest of the year may be "velvet" for every one of you—grower, wholesaler and retailer. It is your right.

I know something of what Easter means to every branch of our profession. To the grower the long days and nights of toil and anxiety; of exposure to the elements; of uncertainty as to the perfect development of plant and flower in one season; the calculating to a day almost the completion of the work that must meet the inevitable demand; the uncertainty of the fickle weather god; the possibilities of coal strikes, floods, hail storms, cyclones and fires; of neglectful and inefficient helpers; of the work of your being swept away almost in the sinking of an eye. Surely you, the foundation of all that follows, deserve all that a benign providence and the great middle agency through whom your success has largely developed can honestly return you as your fair and legitimate share; and I believe you get it. May your prosperity increase. You are everywhere now, but the world is growing. But the field can never be so large that you can fully cover it. Our own New York has nearly touched the four million mark; it will soon be the largest city in the world, but you will never grow more than it will need. Its artistic taste is spreading with its growth. The love for the beautiful is in every soul. Not a heart in all its vast expanse but responds to the perfume and loveliness of a flower. It is not for me to advise you what to grow to meet the ever increasing demand; your own experience and intelligence are your best teachers and they have already told you that nothing can be done too well to practically appeal to the appreciation of Easter in New York.

And you wholesale florists, what has Easter in New York been to you through all these more than thirty years? You who have demonstrated your necessity and by your fact and energy have added a thousand-fold to the prosperity of the grower, and covered the wide land with glass thereby until every hamlet has its greenhouse and the reflection from the sea of crystal can be seen from every hilltop! Your path has not been and is not all roses. You have established centers of distribution through which the retail business of this city has been developed to its present wonderful proportions and by your system only could such results have been accomplished. I know much of your faithfulness to duty, your watchful devotion to your growers' interests, your promptness, your generosity, your frequent sacrifices of self that those who entrust their welfare to your care may be content. And I believe you are appreciated more and more as your value and necessity are realized. Time seems to be with you an after consideration. I never hear you complain of long hours and I have seen you hustling often through the live-long night. Where would the retail florist business be without you? A pigmy gasping for existence! In such a city as ours your value, your power, your necessity dovetailed into the growing and retail ing departments of the trade so thoroughly, so harmoniously that you are a fixture as long as plants grow and flowers bloom. And you deserve to be; we cannot do without you.

And you retailers. What does Easter in New York mean to you, for you have my especial sympathy more than any other branch of floriculture. I know of your early rising, your lack of rest and sleep, your twenty four hour experiences, your conflict with the fickle public, the risks you have to run in purchasing and trusting, the lack of facilities for extraordinary occasions, and the danger of catastrophe when, after placing your entire possessions on the turn of the climatic wheel, one little vagary of the skies may sweep them and yourselves into oblivion. You deserve, as President Fraendly would express it, "all that's coming to you," and this year you got it. After all you are the balance wheel of the whole combination. Where would the wholesaler and the grower be without you? Your beautiful stores are the pride of the city and the finest in the world. You display the wares of the growers and the distributions of the wholesalers so artistically that you are irresistible. Yours are the real risks and outlays in rentals and decorations that commend your enterprise and bravery and faith to all. You have created and made enduringly possible an Easter in New York. Yours has been the skill that has developed decorative art, in ribbon, and basket, and hamper, in harmony of color, in quality of design and perfect blending of variety, until now the whole country looks to New York for new conceptions in ornamentation and novelties in plant and flower arrangement. And so Easter of 1904 is deservedly your banner Easter and none congratulate you more heartily than the wholesalers and the growers who made your prosperity possible. May the trinity of interests grow more and more into helpful fellowship.

To enumerate the varieties of plants and flowers used in New York this Easter or to tell you of the values realized would hardly interest you after the full and generous criticisms and particulars so thoroughly covered by the trade papers and to which I respectfully refer you. What concerns us most are the lessons taught us all by the Easter in New York in 1904. These are far reaching in their value. It is the Easter of 1905, the late Easter, that must be planned for now. To the cut flower growers no advice is necessary. You know especially it will be late for violets; otherwise yours is the beaten track, with the consciousness that the public is a lover of meritorious novelties, and remember that several new roses and carnations are knocking at your doors, and many of them with no uncertain sound.

The plantmen have perhaps gathered some useful hints, though where everything goes it is hard to be too practical. However, they have learned that the largest azaleas are not as salable as formerly; that the medium sizes and the brightest colors are wanted and the beautiful little Holland and Japanese varieties were in extraordinary demand. They realize, too, that the Easter lily's popularity is eternal and that in pot, and basket, and tub, well-grown, there can never be an oversupply. They have found a splendid novelty in Hydrangea hortensis rosea and in the new rose, Madame Norbert Levavasseur, which they have judiciously christened the dwarf Crimson Rambler. We find, too, that the azalea pyramidally grown finds favor, and that our old friend, the camellia, is demonstrating the faith in reincarnation or resurrection which some of us have not abandoned.

The wholesaler had not much to learn; simply that his protests against pickled goods had borne fruit and that his admonitions as to the wisdom of expecting fair and not abnormal prices at Easter had opened the eyes of the growers to the fact that the age of unreasonableness and the patience of the great public, without whose patronage this whole building would dissolve "like the baseless fabric of a vision," have reached their limit and that never again will exorbitant values prevail.

The retailer has gathered wisdom, too, from the phenomenal Easter, as well as an abundance of the one thing needful, and after such a winter none of us can fail to extend honest congratulation. He has learned the value of originality in window decoration, the danger of neglect or lack of artistic effort, the reward of abundant service and perfect system and, above all else, the benefit of reasonable prices and fair profits. He has realized as never before his interests are interwoven with those of the wholesaler and grower, how dependent he is upon both for the supplies that make possible his own success and how advantageous it is to maintain with both a reputation for prompt and full settlement of honest obligations.

Time forbids, though other interests deserve consideration in this glance at Easter in New York. The supply men are no unimportant part of it; the green goods section spreads its influence in every mart. The novelties and necessities handled by these great lieutenants of prosperity would fill a volume. Let us hope this is the beginning of the golden age for all of us that makes harmony universal and brotherly confidence and hand grasp inspirational and ever green and sweet the memory of this Easter in New York!

A TREE PLANTERS' MANUAL.

There are in all sections of the country hundreds of thriving towns where the florists are doing a prosperous business in bedding stock, but in which the people are dependent on the tree peddler and their own ability as planters for their shade trees, shrubs, fruit trees, etc. And even in the places where there are large and well stocked nurseries it is quite the usual thing to consult the florist who plants the geraniums and cannas on the lawn, about the shrubs to go in the border by the fence, the vines to screen the barn or the trees to plant around the church that's building on the corner. Thus it has come about that an increasing number of florists are each year doing something with nursery stock and finding that it can be made a highly profitable department of the business.

One advantage of the nursery department is that the planting can be done early in the spring, before it is safe to plant out tender stock and when there is no pressure of other work. And again in the fall there is a period during which nearly all of the most salable things in the line of trees and shrubs may be planted, as well as many herbaceous plants, notably peonies. In fact, the fall season is often the best of the two for the florist who does this class of work, for he can book his orders during spring, summer and early autumn, while the specimens on his own grounds and about town are at their best; then in the fall he gets his order filled by some reliable nurseryman and, on its arrival, heels the stock in for the few days which may elapse before it is convenient to plant. If the careful planter buys his stock from some reliable nursery, where it has been regularly transplanted, so as to become furnished with good balls of fibrous roots, all but a few unusually difficult things may be guaranteed to live, particularly if the seller is so located that he can keep a watchful eye open to see that the stock gets proper care as to watering, etc. Guaranteeing the stock to live inspires confidence, leads to better prices and makes it easy to get orders.

There are a great many nursery catalogues that will be of assistance to the florist who deals in trees and shrubs, but there are few which he can use to better advantage than the Manual of Beautiful Grounds just issued by the Peterson Nursery, 170 La Salle street, Chicago. This book, while designed for free distribution and to bring business to the nursery, contains no prices, these being printed in a separate pamphlet, so that the Manual can be shown to a florist's customers without divulging the cost of the specimen at the nursery, which naturally is a good deal less than one is justified in charging for it planted and guaranteed to live for a year.

The Manual of Beautiful Grounds is commendable as a piece of beautiful printing, beautifully bound. It was obviously prepared for distribution among a class of discriminating buyers. It is as little like an advertisement as any catalogue can be. As a matter of fact the name of Peterson appears on only three or four of its eighty pages. The concern does not cater to the mailing trade; as is stated in the Manual, they do not deal in "microscopic specimens;" their specialty is stock in extra heavy sizes, which can be moved without any material setback, and give immediate effect.

The first few pages of the Manual are given over to general information, cultural suggestions and suggestions on landscape work and tree planting drawn from Wm. A. Peterson's own extensive experience. The balance of the work is a descriptive list of recommended varieties, including trees, shrubs, vines, hardy herbaceous stock, etc., illustrated with more than eighty halftones, most of them reproduced from photographs taken at the nursery. The descriptions are brief but complete, popular rather than botanical and contain none of that laudation of his wares which the catalogue maker often feels to be essential.

But probably in no other feature of his very handsome books does the publisher take so much pride as in his nomenclature. The popular name is given in black-faced type, followed by the botanical name in italics, the latter according to the Index Kewensis. Mr. Peterson is a student as well as a business man and finds it both a pleasure and a source of profit to have his stock true to name, and that the right name. In the absence of any universally recognized American authority he has adopted the Index Kewensis, acknowledged as an authoritative botanical list by all the botanical world.

Peonies are one of the leading specialties at the Peterson Nursery, the collection numbering probably more varieties than any other in the United States, for everything is tested and proved. It is in this line that the nursery does its principal business with florists. A peony list is published in June but the Manual contains a list of recommended sorts as follows:

Festiva maxima, white (splashed carmine; Queen Victoria, white, blush guard; Golden Harvest, blush guard, balance yellow; Marie LeMoine, creamy white; Triomphe de l'Exposition de Lille, light pink; Delicatissima, delicate, light pink; Livingstone, pale pink bordered carmine; Alexander Dumas, mixed pink; Modele de Perfection, delicate pink, full; M. Barral, rose pink; Rosea grandiflora, rich rose red; M. Boucharlataine, rosy lilac; Souv. de Gaspard Calot, large rose pink; Atrosanguinea superba, blood red; Purpurea Delachei, purplish red; Richardson's rubra superba, crimson, late; Feliz Crousse, bright red.

The cream of the phloxes are said to be: Independence, tall white; La Cygne, white; Richard Wallace, white, violet eye; Beranger, blush pink; Le Soleil, soft pink; Cross of Honor, lavender, white border; Pantheon, light rose; Amabilis, rose red; Coquelicot, brick red; Boule de Feu, red; Eclaireur, purplish crimson; King of Purples, dark maroon.

One concise statement in the Manual, while it is nothing new, to most, is worth jotting down in the memory for those who are only about to enter the tree planting business: "Trees bear the same relation to one another as the squares of their diameters; hence a four-inch tree is four times as large as a two-inch tree and a seven-inch tree is twice as large as a five-inch tree."

THE READERS' CORNER.

Transplanting Trees and Shrubs.

Mr. Scott offers some excellent suggestions in the Review for April 14, about pruning shrubs when transplanting, and I would even cut back more severely than he recommends in some cases, but his remark that early spring transplanting of evergreens is wrong, is not applicable to our more southern latitude and under our hotter sunshine. If we could be sure of plenty of moisture, both in the soil and in the atmosphere, for a month after setting them, it might be all right and, as a matter of fact, if we could move them in a damp, cloudy day in August and have a week or more of wet weather follow, it would be the ideal time, but we are very liable to have several weeks of drought in late spring and early summer and when this occurs, late planted evergreens are pretty sure to suffer, if they do not collapse entirely.

There is another point which I believe is not generally understood. It is now generally recommended to remove all the leaves from Ilex opaca when transplanted from its wild state and my experience leads me to the conclusion that the same treatment is equally beneficial to all broad-leaved evergreens, at least unless they have balls of earth and, although as good an authority as Joseph Meehan claims that coniferous evergreens do better if a portion of the foliage is allowed to remain when transplanted, I would much sooner take the chances with all of it removed than with all left on and I would, at least, cut them back very severely.

There is one important difference, also, in the care of newly transplanted stuff between evergreens and deciduous shrubs or trees. When drought gets very severe, we are admonished by the drooping foliage of deciduous plants that they are suffering and must have water, but after the new growth of an evergreen gets hardened the first notice we get that they are suffering is by the falling off of leaves, and it is then too late to save them. They must be carefully watched in dry weather to see if the soil around them is getting dry. We once planted several large hemlocks for a customer and cautioned him very thoroughly about watering, etc., and he got them started and growing finely, but a late summer drought came and he was not on guard and lost them all.

CACTUS DAHLIAS.

The improvement in varieties of this charming class of dahlias has made a great difference in the popularity of the flower. Those who are giving attention to the raising of seedlings believe that perfection is not by any means yet reached; and that the possibilities in store are such that the cactus forms are likely to secure even greater esteem among the flower-loving public. It is pleasing to note that those who award certificates to new varieties are not led away by mere size. Perfection in form is quite the leading point. Only a few years back the better sorts had flat central florets. In the newer kinds, George Gordon and H. W. Sillem, for example, those in the center of the bloom are narrow and reflexed at the edges in the same manner as the rest. Stiffness of flower stem, too, is one of the principal qualities raisers think of.

The past two seasons in England have not been favorable to the proper development of dahlias, and cactus varieties have not been so double in form generally as they will be when we have a normal summer and autumn. But still, there are few subjects in the outside garden that give a lengthier or a brighter display. I would like to see growers give, as a rule, a little more attention to the cultural needs of their cactus dahlias. It appears to me that gardeners generally are behind the exhibitor in this matter. For instance, one could wish that the same care be taken in propagating young stock, and in growing them on under glass into nice sturdy plants, well rooted in 6-inch, or even larger, pots, by planting-out time, in the same way that we find chrysanthemums managed in their early stages. The results would be more encouraging. Instead of this, we too often find the old roots of dahlias stored away under the benches, brought out in spring, cut into pieces, planted, and the same process followed year after year.

Cactus dahlias like plenty of room when growing. It is well not to have a plant closer than four feet to its neighbor. A soil deeply dug, and well worked, suits them better than one rich in manures. The latter has a tendency to produce too much leaf. But tion. Disbudding the blooms of cactus dahlias may readily be overdone. In the case of most sorts this means of gaining nicely-shaped flowers will defeat our object, and instead we obtain blooms with faulty centers. In the matter of the best buds, I have especially noticed this. The buds, as a rule, are thrown up in threes. Now, the central one, which looks like giving the finer bloom, usually finishes inferior to the side ones in form, as well as in the stiffness and length of the stems. And, again, it is important that the growing shoots immediately under the flower buds be removed, because if left they will grow faster than the buds, and smother them. I would, however, leave the lower shoots. These advance eventually, and continue the display of flowers.

Improved varieties of cactus dahlias are being produced so rapidly that it is rare any one lasts longer than three or four years, that is if we have a desire to cultivate the best. It may be well to first name the certificated varieties of the past year, because it is certain there are among them some very choice things. Certificates at other than the real dahlia

ALOCASIA ILLUSTRIS.

Among the highest authorities there is some confusion whether this most ornamental plant is an alocasia or colocasia. Alocasias, colocasias and caladiums are closely allied. The difference is some slight variation in the flower or fruit character. Broadly, we would say that the alocasias are evergreen and the colocasias herbaceous. We all know the beautiful fancy-leaved caladiums that are herbaceous. More familiar still is the so-called Caladium esculentum, which is not a caladium but a colocasia and familiar to all lovers of plants is Alocasia cuprea (metallica). The above are types of these three closely allied genera. Nicholson classes illustris as an alocasia, so let it go at that.

During the Pan-American year a circular bed of this most ornamental plant could be seen in front of the park superintendent's residence, on Elmwood avenue, Buffalo, where thousands traveled to the show. The illustration will give a better idea of its form than any description. The color of the leaves is a rich dark green, with olive black spots or patches, but no description can give an adequate idea of the subdued but rich coloring.

It is herbaceous. As soon as the frost has injured the foliage, the rhizomes, for they are more than the tubers, should be lifted and laid out on some dry, warm bench till the leaves have dried up. Then they should be stored away in dry sand in some position where drip cannot reach and where the temperature does not go below 50 degrees at any time. They are by no means as easy to winter as Caladium esculentum and should be occasionally examined and if, in January or later, they are showing signs of decay, it is better to start them growing at once.

When starting them into growth is the time to increase your stock. A piece of the root with a dormant bud can be started in a flat of three inches of sand and when growth has progressed put into suitable sized pot, or you can pot the roots at once into light, sandy soil, but in either case a gentle bottom heat is necessary.

They should not be planted out if used for sub-tropical gardening, till settled warm weather, for they are a tropical plant. A rich, friable, well drained soil with plenty of water is what they want during our warm, dry months. As a sub-tropical bedding plant, I know no rival to the beautiful Alocasia illustris.

manures placed on the surface in summer time, when the flower buds are swelling, are not easily overdone.

A good foundation to a well-grown plant should be made by thinning the growth when young. Select about four side shoots to form main stems subsequently, then tie each to a separate stake, pointing in an outward direc-sion. Disbudding the blooms of cactus dahlias may readily be overdone. In the case of most sorts this means of gaining nicely-shaped flowers will defeat our object, and instead we obtain blooms with faulty centers. PANDANUS AS A TABLE PLANT.

In Pandanus Veitchii we have an ideal plant for table work, that is, if properly colored leaves are to be had. I would deviate from the usual method of propagating this, which is generally in a close and warm case in the stove. First, obtain good-colored offsets or suckers; insert these in thumb-pots of sand, and place on a shelf in the stove house. You will find that the general routine of the stove will afford sufficient moisture for the suckers till rooted. These may be potted on in a sandy compost, keeping the plants well elevated to combat against damp; 5½-inch pots are large enough for table plants, confining some to small pots to correspond with your centre plant.

Pandanuses revel in abundance of water in summer, but in being almost dry at the root and overhead in winter. To propagate pandanus in a close and humid atmosphere you will soon find out that the leaves assume a green appearance, and the cultivator will have difficulty to recover the much desired white and green-striped leaves. The plants become too large for table work before the color is obtained. In table plants always endeavor to procure good-colored cuttings to start with, as plants soon pass the stage for dinner-table work.—Gardening World.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Business has shown some improvement in the course of the last week but it has been almost wholly on shipping trade, the local retailers reporting the conditions as no more encouraging than at any time since Easter. Prices have stiffened slightly, the change being more pronounced on carnations than on roses. There are still ample supplies of carnations for all requirements but the market is cleaning up better each day and the sacrifices which were necessary last week are no longer called for. Quality continues good and reports from the growers are generally to the effect that they have large crops in sight. The weather has been very unseasonably cold and this has served to hold the crops off for a time.

Beauties are not in so large supply as in the last two weeks and quality is a little off, considering the season. There are, however, large receipts of Brides and Maids in which the quality is all that could be asked and cheap rates are still quoted to the buyer in quantity. Liberty is coming in more heavily, and of varying quality, but a large proportion of receipts are short-stemmed.

The quantity of Easter lilies now in the market is something surprising. They are to be had literally by the thousands and prices are very low. Callas are only a little less numerous and equally slow sale. Tulips and daffodils are almost out of the market. The indoor stock is nearly all disposed of and the backwardness of the season has resulted in retarding the outdoor crop. The receipts of violets are growing lighter each day and quality is deteriorating rapidly; the prices, of course, are low. In "green goods" smilax continues to grow more scarce, but there are adequate supplies of asparagus. Prices on common ferns have been advanced 50 cents per 1,000 this week.

Various Notes.

C. A. Samuelson is getting remarkably fine sweet peas from Aug. Von Boeselager, Mt. Clemens, Mich.

Bassett & Washburn are getting the first cut from their big house of summer roses. Wieter Bros. are also cutting in their houses of La France and Kaiserin.

One of the week's visitors was Mr. Litig, representing Chas. Dannacher, Davenport, Iowa.

A. L. Randall is spending the week at his estate near Benton Harbor.

Frank Garland and M. Winandy are now nicely located in their new quarters adjoining the Reinbergs' in the Atlas block.

E. F. Winterson Co. is receiving very heavy shipments of jonquils from the south.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is receiving regular shipments of Lilium candidum, but E. E. Pieser says that with Easter lilies so plentiful and cheap they are not badly needed.

Emil Buettner is cutting very fine Morning Glory carnations and the A. L. Randall Co. says they are much more useful than Enchantress or Higinbotham for shipment to New Orleans and other distant points. Mr. Buettner has had very fine success with his white lilac this season.

Albert Amling will tear down a part of his old range this spring, rebuild it and also add several new houses, practically doubling the extent of his establishment. The Moninger Co. will supply all the material. Nearly all the additional space will be given to green goods, smilax and asparagus, which has been his specialty this year.

John Miller, north of town, has had a very good season. He grows nothing but carnations and his varieties are those recommended for quantity, but he gets pretty fair quality at the same time. He is figuring that he may considerably enlarge his plant next year.

A. Dietsch is at Mobile, Ala., where he will remain until about June 1. His health is considerably improved.

C. G. Samuel is running the Wells street store formerly conducted by Benj. Blameuser.

There was a small fire April 13 in the building on Clybourn avenue occupied in part by the Kaemper Flower store.

Weber Bros. have planted the house vacated by the lilies with year-old plants of Meteor which had been stored outside all winter and which came out in fine shape. The new Weber establishment will be rushed to completion at once and planted to Beauties, requiring about 8,000 plants.

John Mangel has leased the floor above his store at Monroe street and Wabash avenue and connected the two by an inside stairway.

J. A. Budlong says he is tired of work and now rides a motor-cycle.

Geo. Wittbold Co. has been growing a bench of dahlias this winter but has not found it profitable, as they got too few flowers.

The Florists' Club held its regular meeting at Handel Hall last evening, the special order for the evening being a discussion on coal. The members interested in bowling will hold a special meeting at the Geroux alleys, 170 Madison street, next Tuesday evening to arrange for games to decide who will play on the Chicago team in the S. A. F. tournament at St. Louis next August.

In the weekly price list E. H. Hunt says: "Weather conditions no doubt are having an effect on trade, especially here in town, and some of our friends are not wearing the smile which would not come off directly after Easter."

Bassett & Washburn took in 229 cars of coal from December 1 to April 1.

NEW ORLEANS.

Horticultural Society Outing.

At its last meeting, on a Sunday, the New Orleans Horticultural Society was the guest of Mr. Alost, at his nursery on the Gentilly road. The members met at Elysian Fields depot at 2 o'clock p. m. and took the train to Gentilly Station, where Mr. Alost was in waiting with three wagons to drive his visitors to his beautiful country home, arriving there at 3:30 o'clock. The absence of the president, Joseph Steckler, was the only disappointment of the day, he sending his regrets that it was impossible for him to be present, owing to the serious illness of his little son. Mr. Steckler sent his team with liquid refreshments, which proved to be a very welcome article. At 5 o'clock p. m. Mr. Alost rang his old plantation dinner bell, and each visitor took a chair at the table, laden with a most bountiful repast.

After eating two hours, speeches were in order. Mr. Panter acted as toastmaster. J. Eblen was the first gentleman called upon. Others who spoke were Mr. Valdejo, P. Abele and J. A. Newsham. Dan Newsham was called upon to give an account of his trip to St. Louis, he just having returned from a three weeks' stay in that city. He stated that the florists of New Orleans will feel proud when they see their plants and note how they rank with others. A beautiful space has been selected in the conservatory for them. Mr. Newsham expects to leave soon with two carloads of plants. The following have sent plants for the state exhibit: U. J. Virgin, J. Steckler Seed Company, Limited; J. Eblen, E. Valdejo, Abele Bros., J. St. Mard, C. Eble, H. Rehm, E. Zbinden, Quinette Bros., A. Commander and Audubon Park Association.

After the address of Mr. Newsham Mr. Panter thanked Mr. Alost and his family for courtesies extended the members of the society, and moved that three cheers be given them, which was done in a hearty manner. Afterward, the visitors rambled over the farm and through the nurseries of Mr. Alost, and later assembled on the gallery and enjoyed fine violin music by Mr. Lapouyade and P. Chopin.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market conditions were anything but encouraging up to Saturday of last week and prices were as low as to suggest dreams of "mid-summer nights," though the weather contradicted the illusion. In fact, one of the first signs of next winter, a veritable snow storm, raged when our eyes opened on Thursday morning. The chilling blasts continue and early birds and worms and spring planting are yet out of the question. Summer will be here on the lightning express when it comes, and 1904 looks now like "the year without a spring." The cold spell or something gave a temporary boost to prices on Saturday. Everything advanced a little and towards evening the best things were at a premium. Monday showed continued improvement. Better prices prevailed, and stock was cleared to good advantage, the demand taking everything of value. Beauties touched 30 cents for the best and Brides and Maids 8 cents, while special violets readily brought 50 cents per hundred. All these quotations are, however, for the highest grade. But warmer weather and larger shipments may make the present week a fit companion for the last before it ends. Violets are in the sere and yellow leaf; quality and quantity both are deteriorating and soon they will be but a memory. Even the street merchants have turned to roses and trailing arbutus. Lily of the valley is doing better, but lilies have dropped to the lowest rates of the season, the finest seldom going above $3 per hundred. The belated flowers are opening in multitudes and there seems no end to the supply.

Weddings are increasing and should begin to show a beneficial effect upon the general trade. The Twombly wedding last week was the largest of the year to date. Mr. Humphrey says it was one of the most beautiful he ever superintended. Lilies and American Beauties were the principal flowers, and large quantities of Crimson Ramblers.

Various Notes.

The severe winter has done incalculable damage in the nurseries and orchards around New York. In the Hudson river valley the estimate of loss to the fruit growers alone is over two millions. The effects of the long continued and extreme cold are evident on every hand. In all the nurseries we have visited the dire results are becoming more distressingly evident daily.

The attendance at the auctions increases weekly. Many new faces are to be seen this season. Prices realized are more encouraging and the promise of a large business brightens. Elliott's sales of hardy roses and evergreens are quite up to the supply arriving. At Cleary's Horticultural Hall the sale of orchids from Sander & Son takes place on Friday of this week, comprising cattleyas, lœlias, oncidiums, vandas, cypripediums and hybrids.

A visit to Freeport last Sunday revealed a good reason for James Dean's locating in one of the prettiest localities on Long Island, where honors municipal have been crowding thick upon him. Here, too, Charles Lenker has a growing business, built up during the last seven years, and ten acres of land which he is devoting to nursery purposes in a favored section on the Brooklyn trolley line, where it grows daily in value. He has three houses 200 feet long devoted to carnations, stocks, sweet peas and bedding plants, lilies, gladioli, Crimson Rambler and vegetable plants and will build another house 19x117 this season. In the nursery are silver maples, evergreens, peonies, irises, rhododendrons and shrubs of many varieties.

Joseph J. Levy, who has been with Alex Guttman during the last three years, was agreeably surprised after Easter by the presentation of a beautiful gold watch from his employer as a memento of faithful service.

J. K. Allen has been wrestling for a week at his home with the grippe and is convalescent after quite a severe attack of the prevalent indisposition.

William Nilsson, of Woodlawn, whose artistic work at his grounds near the depot has been admired by so many thousands of travelers daily on the N. Y. & N. H. R. R., is being crowded away from his present location by the building of the viaduct and is removing the greenhouses to Wakefield.

Harry May reports his father, John N. May, of Summit, N. J., recovering from his long illness in the sunny south, and now at Pinehurst, N. C., on his way to New York.

The Bowling Club's captain is unfortunate in having to shoulder the anxiety caused by a severe accident to his wife, who is in the hospital suffering from a dislocated shoulder. This accounts for the scarcity of 200 averages of late on the club's alleys.

Julius Kretschmar, uncle of A. H. Langjahr, the wholesale florist, is very ill, having suffered his second stroke of paralysis at his residence in Brooklyn.

The Clucas & Boddington Co. has engaged Herbert Greensmith, of Riverton, N. J., to take charge of its nursery department at Sparkill, N. Y., where he has moved with his family.

Bowling.

The bowling at the club's alleys on Monday evening was excellent, some splendid scores being made and much interest in the contest at St. Louis was manifested, the club being already assured of a strong representative team there. Henry Bunyard, who has just returned from a very successful trip for the Clucas & Boddington Co., was an interested visitor. Mr. Bunyard is suffering from the results of a severe attack of the grippe and was obliged to shorten his trip on account of illness. The best four games of the evening are here recorded:

BOSTON.

The Market.

The market has been decidedly dull during the past week and prices have ruled low. Few carnations now fetch over $3 and fine stock goes at $2. To show what small net returns some growers are getting, we might state that a carnation grower who produces fine flowers stated that his returns for the two weeks after Easter would average about 75 cents per 100. He felt disgusted, and we don't wonder at it. Roses are selling very low and the quality gets poorer. Violets are nearing the end. Campbell is still plentiful but is out-classed altogether by Princess of Wales.

Various Notes.

A few nice Iris Hispanica have been coming in lately and bring good prices. It is singular that this beautiful and inexpensive bulbous plant, so highly prized in Europe, is not more grown here for Easter and Memorial day trade; it is just what is needed. Wallflowers, English primroses, cornflowers, anemones and ranunculus are displayed in a number of the florists' windows. Vases of Crinum Moorei and Eucharis amazonica in a Boylston street store the past week attracted some attention. The last named in particular is a useful florists' plant and seems to be coming back into favor.

One of the leading retailers made a very effective window display the past week by using yellow marguerites and English primroses exclusively.

Patriots', or Lexington day, held as a state holiday on April 19, did not quicken the pulses of the flower trade. A good many take advantage of the day to do their customary spring gardening. Peas, potatoes and pansies are in demand.

Weather conditions of late have been remarkable for the last half of April. On the morning of the 15th the temperature fell to 18 degrees near Boston and almost equally low readings were recorded on one or two other mornings. On April 16 snow fell steadily for eight hours and a maximum day temperature of 37 degrees was more suggestive of February than April. Vegetation is, fortunately, very backward and no injury has been sustained. The blessings of an early season are not to be desired in New England and our nurserymen and seedsmen find the chilly climatic conditions a great help to them while they are congested with business.

N. F. McCarthy & Co. opened the auction season on April 15, with a large stock of hybrid perpetual roses, trees and shrubs. Prices were well up to the average. The second sale occurs on April 22 and the third is scheduled for April 26. The bulk of the nursery stock is from Holland, but a considerable portion is from American growers. During May and June this firm will hold auction sales every Tuesday and Friday.

Indications point to a lessened amount of greenhouse construction among florists during 1904. This is not surprising, considering heavy coal bills and lower cut flower returns. A considerable amount of building on private estates will take place. Hitchings & Co. have some half dozen contracts already in hand.

R. & J. Farquhar & Co. are stocking up heavily with herbaceous perennials at their nurseries in Roslindale. At their new nurseries in Sharon, trees and shrubs are being largely planted.

A good number of special prizes for carnations will be offered at the coming show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, when the C. S. A. meets with it. Important additional special prizes for chrysanthemums are being arranged for and all horticultural societies in New England will be asked to offer special premiums for competition among their members.

Philadelphia Rambler rose was not counted a success by those who tried it for Easter. The color is good, but trusses are very small and rather of a drooping tendency. It also seems more susceptible to mildew than Crimson Rambler. Pink Ramblers lose their color too soon to be accounted acquisitions as pot plants.

A lengthy report published in pamphlet form and finely illustrated, of the committee on school gardens and herbariums of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, has just been issued, edited by the capable chairman, Henry Clapp, one of the founders of the school garden system. The report makes most interesting reading and shows what a wonderful work is being done in this section on these lines to interest the young in plants and flowers.

The offer of Col. Charles Pfaff of a fifty-dollar cup for roses at the meeting of the American Rose Society here in 1905, will soon be supplemented by others. An advance schedule containing all special premiums, as well as the regular prizes offered by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, will be ready in August.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The fluctuation in prices has been a feature of the past week's business. Quotations in the market report, though given with great care, are totally misleading. American Beauties were so plentiful at times that hardly any offer was refused on several days last week, but the supply shortened at the close of last week and this week prices have advanced and hold firmly. Callas and Easter lilies are very poor stock, there being no demand for either. Single violets are about over. Sweet peas are the most popular flowers on the list to-day, great quantities of fine stock being used at the very moderate prices quoted. Daisies, valley, short Beauties and, to a certain extent, fine single daffodils are also in demand. The general tone of the market is unsteady.

Death of George Huster.

George Huster, gardener in charge of the extensive grounds and greenhouses of Girard College, who died last week, was buried at Holy Cross cemetery last Monday. The funeral services were held at the home of his nephew, Leonard Ruber, florist, 2003 Fairmount avenue. Mr. Huster had done excellent work at Girard College. He always had a fine collection of stove and flowering plants, while his bedding, especially in front of the main hall, was unusually handsome. He was a member of the Florists' Club and went with that body to many of the S. A. F. conventions. His death will leave a gap hard to fill among the horticulturists of our city.

An Afternoon's Rest.

Jacob Becker says that a friend can be rebuked severely while an acquaintance cannot. Possibly he meant, with safety to the speaker. My friends exercise this privilege. They say, "why, that article about so and so's place was miserable; you should do much better than that." Possibly, but conditions count for a great deal. The best plants will not thrive without care, nor can the best account of them be written without a cordial reception. Suppose after traveling fifteen miles, more or less, you are received by a horticulturist who won't talk about his pets, but wishes you in Jericho, and shows it. Can you do justice to that man's place? It is certainly very difficult.

But when on the other hand you are warmly received and shown all that is of interest, it is quite a different thing. This is always the case at the Riverton Nurseries, where I had the pleasure of spending a couple of hours one day this week with Vice-president Eisele and George A. Strohlein. The aquatics and perennials are features of especial interest now. One large water lily pond is in course of construction, while several divisions in the older ponds are being removed for the sake of convenience. One pond is filled with roots of varieties ready for shipping, all carefully protected from the unusual cold of the present month, which has caused them to be later starting this year than usual. The tender varieties in the tanks indoors are in a particularly thrifty condition. This whole department is now under the charge of James T. Clark, who has mastered many of the problems which beset the grower of aquatics. Nymphaea odorata rosea is doing splendidly. A very large stock of this sterling variety has rewarded his efforts. Steady progress marks this venture, a few years ago considered by many as an uncertain field for commercial enterprise.

The hardy perennials now demand close attention, the planting out season being well under way. Mr. Eisele has this field under his personal supervision and promises a most extensive and interesting display in August. The hybrid roses occupy long rows of frames, as well as several of the houses. They have carried well throughout the severe winter and are now breaking finely. Magna Charta and Mme. Gabriel Luizet, Ulrich Brunner, Baroness Rothschild and a long list of well-known favorites are found regularly arranged in blocks, showing order and system. A block of 10,000 or more Ampelopsis Veitchii were just coming into leaf. A couple of frames were filled with the pretty butterfly violet, Viola cornuta papilio, said to bloom throughout the summer, either in shade or moderately sunny places. It is useful for planting with rhododendrons or in shrubbery, where a carpet of blue is desired. A curious plant is one which first makes flowers and then tall leaf stalks, facetiously described as umbrella substitutes. Golden hops are grown as ornamental plants, not for golden beer. Mr. Eisele spoke with great pleasure of the letter just received from a leading retailer, thanking him for delivering his azalea order exactly in the condition desired, an encouragement for future effort.

Ferns in small pots have proved exceptionally good stock this season. Great numbers are coming up from seeds sown. Asparagus plumosus compacta has been much used in the same way; that is, for fern dishes. A myriocladus, when given plenty of root room, produces beautiful, long-stemmed sprays. A couple of small houses are filled with Cocos Weddelliana. Dracena goldeana, beautifully marked, is highly prized and it is believed will become more popular when better known. Quite a lot of palms are being shipped, giving room for others to be shifted and spread. J. M. Keller, when at Riverton recently, said that a florist when ordering palms always meant kentias, now a temporary cutting down of varieties much to be regretted.

Nephrolepis Bostoniensis is considered the fern of the day, with N. Scottii as desirable in small pots. The packing shed was pretty full of orders picked out for shipment, nothing it was said to what would be seen in a day or two, when a sign calling for volunteer evening packers was likely to be displayed. The bedding plant men have taken kindly to the new red-leaved pennisetum mentioned in a previous report.

Various Notes.

Edwin Lonsdale has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. J. G. Lamb is named as assignee.

James M. Thoirs, of Camden, N. J., has been particularly busy since Easter.

Samuel S. Pennock is receiving some very fine Liberties.

Leo Niessen continues to handle many cases of wild smilax. The season for this staple decorative green is still in full swing.

Charles F. Edgar & Co. have received some nice orders for florists' supplies.

A special meeting of the Florists' Club was held last Saturday afternoon to pass resolutions of regret and sympathy on the death of George Huster. The club sent a floral emblem to his funeral.

The Flower Market is experiencing an excellent demand for sweet peas and other spring flowers.

William J. Baker is handling some very fine daisies and carnations.

E. A. Stroud, of Strafford, is still sending superb fancy carnations to S. S. Pennock.

Great sympathy is expressed on all sides for Messrs. Craig and Lonsdale.

W. P. Peacock, of Atco, N. J., has doubled his area of glass for propagating dahlias.

PHIL.

Resolutions of Respect.

At a special meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, held at the club room, Horticultural Hall, on Saturday, April 16, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The members of the Florists' Club having heard with deep regret of the death of their fellow member, George Huster, RESOLVED, That the club make a special minute of the high estimation in which they held Mr. Huster for his loyal and faithful services on behalf of its interests from its foundation up to the time of his death. His professional ability and zeal were widely recognized and his singleness of heart, earnestness of purpose and high sense of honor were distinguishing characteristics that earned him the affection and respect of all; and,

RESOLVED, That the secretary forward a copy of this minute to the relatives of Mr. Huster as a testimony to them of the warm regard in which Mr. Huster was held and an expression of their sympathy in a mutual loss which they all deplore; and, further

RESOLVED, That the floral emblem of the club be sent to the funeral.

MONMOUTH, ILL.—Thomas Hewitt is adding two greenhouses, which will double the capacity of his establishment.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The unseasonable weather of late has made trade in cut flowers irregular and some of our florists are complaining of dull times since Easter. The greenhouse men have plenty to occupy their minds from now on, making preparation for spring planting, which has not as yet begun, owing to the backward spring, so they are keeping themselves busy filling up with bedding plants, places made vacant by Easter stock. Some of our retailers are kept busy with early spring weddings, receptions and other social affairs, while others have considerable funeral work on hand. The wholesalers claim that the past week was better than the week previous, as far as trade was concerned. Cut stock was just as plentiful but the demand much better.

In roses the supply is fairly good. Brides and Maids are of fine quality and color, with the price from $6 to $8 per 100 for selects and $4 to $5 for firsts. President Carnot and Golden Gate are selling well. Selects in Meteor and Liberty are scarce, though plenty of firsts and seconds are in the market. Fancy Beauties are quite plentiful at $4 and $5 per dozen, but more of the $2 and $3 kind, which sell well. Carnations are still leaders as quick sellers. The market is well supplied with good stock. Fancy sorts bring $3, firsts $2.50 and ordinary are $2 per 100, though some are cheaper in 1,000 lots. White and Lawson sell best. Light pinks are slow.

Plenty of lilies are coming in at present, in fact more than the demand calls for. The same may be said for callas. In other bulb stock, quite a few Romans were in the past week. Daffodils and jonquils are still a drag. A lot of fine white tulips are in the market at $2 per 100. Valley is in fair supply at $3. Sweet peas are in better demand this week. The cold weather brought better color to the violets and a good supply was in all week, at 50 cents per 100.

Florists' Club Meeting.

The club's monthly meeting on Thursday afternoon was not so well attended as it should have been. This, no doubt, was because most of the greenhouse men are busy with outside work. Still twenty members, including the officers responded to the call, this being our annual rose meeting. The display from outside growers was very fine. Among them was a fine vase of La Detroit from Breitmeyer's Sons, of Detroit, Mich. Heller Bros., of New Castle, Ind., sent General MacArthur. Peter Reinberg, Chicago, showed Uncle John and Mme. Chatenay. The Benthey-Coatesworth Co., of Chicago, exhibited a vase each of American Beauties, Liberty, Bride and Bridesmaid. None of the local growers made a display, all being off crop. Visitors at the meeting were Phil J. Hauswirth, Leonard Kill and L. Coatsworth of Chicago. All these gentlemen contributed remarks for the good of the club and the S. A. F.

All chairmen reported progress for their respective committees. Frank H. Weber, nurseryman, was elected to membership. Applications for membership were received from John Cannon, of Webster Groves, and J. H. Ahner, of Kirkwood. After the large lot of communications were disposed of the president appointed Messrs. Ammann, Guy and Windler to pass on the roses on exhibition. The report was as follows: La Detroit, very fine pink, large flowers with great stems, somewhat bruised through shipment. Uncle John, very fine, best of its kind. Mme. Chatenay, very fine, elegant foliage and fine stems. The display of the Benthey-Coatsworth Co., of Beauties, Maids, Brides and Liberty, very fine, well-grown stock. Heller Bros., General MacArthur, very fine red rose, elegant foliage and fine stem.

The report was followed by a discussion led by John Steidle, on "Field Planting and Growing of Carnations," which brought out a good discussion from the carnation growers. George Windler followed with an essay on "Pot Grown Chrysanthemums," which was well received by the members. A vote of thanks was well tendered each gentleman for his effort. The question was asked, why don't callas thrive in a bench where chrysanthemums were grown? The answer was finally left to some of the readers of the REVIEW whom we hope will be able to answer this question in the next issue. After disposing of the roses on exhibition the meeting adjourned. The next meeting will take place May 12, at which J. F. Ammann will lead a discussion on "Replanting Rose Stock" and F. W. Ude will lead a discussion on "Violet Growing."

Various Notes.

John Steidle has just finished building a new carnation house 20x114, which was built by R. Thompson, of St. Louis.

The remarks of Phil Hauswirth at the club meeting were much appreciated by the members. Mr. Hauswirth said that in calling on the different retailers in St. Louis he was much surprised in hearing a number of them say that they were not members of the club. He claims that it is the duty of every florist in the city where there is a club to become a member of it, and especially when the S. A. F. convention is to be held in its city. Mr. Kill's and Mr. Coatsworth's remarks were also along the same line. After these remarks, on motion of Henry Ostertag the chairman appointed a committee, consisting of H. Ostertag, Otto Koenig and George Windler, to look after these new members and report at the next meeting.

According to the Daily Republic, which records daily what happened in St. Louis twenty-five years ago, stated on April 16, 1879, a heavy hailstorm broke many skylights and wrecked the greenhouses of Charles M. Ellerd, Jordan Floral Co., Theo. Newman, Charles Bleeckert, Alexander Waldbart, Benj. Horton and W. D. Grant.

Bowling.

Some of the florist bowlers journeyed over to Belleville Sunday afternoon to play a return match with E. W. Guy's team. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Kuehn, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Beyer, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Ellis, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Beneke and Arthur Ellison. The florists lost all three games and the least said about it the better. The scores were as follows:

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Preceded by a week of moderate activity, last week's business was expected to be an improvement but instead business dipped to a low ebb. Undoubtedly the very unseasonable weather has much to do with this state of affairs; the temperature is falling away below the frost mark almost every night.

The heavy receipts of all kinds of flowers has caused a severe decline in prices. White roses and carnations are the only flowers that are in active demand. Colored stock of all kinds is hard to move. The quality of all stock is exceedingly fine. Lilies are offered at ridiculously low figures. There are still quantities of very good qualities of double and single daffodils in the market. Smilax is a scarce article.

THE lettuce growers about Chicago had a poor season up to about March 1. Coal bills were high and prices low, but in the last six or eight weeks values have advanced to fully double what they were during the severe cold weather. A1 lettuce is bringing 40 to 50 cents a case of twelve to fifteen plants.

VEGETABLE PLANTS.

When convenient to a good market, the raising of vegetable plants under glass for subsequent planting outdoors is often quite a remunerative business and even when they have to be shipped quite a distance they are not likely to suffer much in transit. When the season gets late for planting vegetable crops to mature indoors, the houses can often be turned to better advantage for the above purpose, as the prices of produce are often run down through competition with southern products during the late spring months.

A great mistake is often made in trying to raise too many plants in the space at command, to the detriment of the quality of the stock produced, and I would advise anyone who intends establishing a trade in this line to pay particular attention to the quality of his stock. Once a name is established for sending out first-class stock, a steady demand is assured. This cannot be done if the plants are huddled together and quantity made the first consideration. A satisfied customer is the best advertisement and such a customer will be perfectly willing to pay a higher price for stock that he can rely on than for stock that he is taking a good deal of risk in planting. If you can make ends meet for the start, it will pay to wait a little for the dollars and cents, but just as sure as you send out good stock, the dollars and cents will come.

The plants should be firm and stocky and of good color. Such plants can only be produced where ample space and ample light and air are given. It is often hard to establish such subjects as peppers and egg-plants in the open ground when adverse climatic conditions prevail, but when good stock is planted they have a much better chance than weakly drawn up things with little or no backbone to them. We have seen poor tomato plants under very favorable conditions pick up surprisingly fast and give good returns, but peppers and egg plants, the latter especially, seldom if ever give good returns unless good plants are set out to begin with. Another point of the utmost importance is the proper hardening off of the plants before sending them out. This matter is too often neglected and the plants are sure to receive a check if carelessly rushed out, unprepared for the change, where if gradually hardened off little or no check will result.

At all of the pea growing sections the planting will be very late. This may have no material effect on the crop, but it will prevent a good start.

CENTERVILLE, IA.—D. Hamilton reports that spring has arrived, business opening up in good shape, weather cool but giving opportunity for planting, and everything on a rush.

CHICAGO.—No seeding has been done for onion sets as yet, but it is thought that a good movement toward getting seed into the ground will be under way by the end of the week.

REPORTS generally for the month thus far do not show a sufficient gain in trade to make up for the shortage of March and February, and it looks as though May will have to hump itself to make 1904 equal 1903.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—This section, which is now an important onion set point, has as yet seen no planting of seed. We are two weeks late now, with the prospect of adding another before the weather will permit planting.

TORONTO, ONT.—Under date of April 16, J. Simmers & Co. write: "We have beautiful spring weather here, six inches of snow on the ground. Yesterday we had as severe a snow storm as any of the past winter; very encouraging for the seed business."

SPINACH seed seems to be the only item that is holding its own in price, with a prospect of advancing.

THE backwardness of planting operations at all points is having a demoralizing effect on the seed trade. Lack of customary orders is causing jobbers to lower prices in the effort to force sales. This meets with little response, and the planting time for sweet corn, cucumbers and other seeds that are unusually short is likely to drag along until all chance for a proper price for stock has been lost.

EASTER LILY BULB SITUATION.

F. H. Henry, of Henry & Lee, was a Chicago visitor this week, having but recently returned from six weeks in Bermuda. With regard to the Easter lily bulb situation he states:

"While the acreage planted is about that of last year, the stock planted is of a smaller grade and growers are practically unanimous in predicting a shortage of from twenty-five to fifty per cent in the larger sizes, that is, 7 to 9 and 9 to 11 bulbs, with an average crop of 5 to 7. Owing to the short crop outlook prices are quoted about ten per cent higher than last year. Quality shows a little improvement over last season's crop.

"The prices on Japan stock, Lilium longiflorum and its varieties, are quoted at an advance from fifteen to twenty-five per cent over those of last year, due to an increase in freight rates from Japan and to the land tax levied by the Japanese government as the result of the war with Russia. An export duty had been feared, but it has been decided not to levy it at this time. The advance in price is more pronounced on the giganteum variety than on the regular longiflorum. While this is merely a matter of opinion, we do not expect that the war complications will interfere with the regular deliveries of longiflorums, these shipments being usually made in August and September, but later shipments may be interfered with.

"Figures which have recently come to hand show that the average Bermuda crop, say that of 1903, is about 10,000 cases, or two million bulbs. The figures on the Japanese shipments of last year show a total of from three and a half to four million bulbs. The proportion of the 9 to 10 size was between fifteen and twenty per cent of the quantity harvested of the 7 to 9 and smaller sizes."

PACIFIC COAST.

THE Hortensia Horticultural Society, of Oakland, Cal., has changed its name to the German Gardeners' Club, as being more appropriate. They have quarters at Baker's Hall, meeting on the second and fourth Thursdays of each month. Simon Winkler, 1098 Versailles street, Alameda, Cal., is secretary.

CARNATIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

The following is from the Los Angeles Times, and will be of interest to all who are engaged in growing the carnation:

To the stranger within the gates of this state, the carnation growing of California becomes an object of the greatest interest and a most satisfactory sight. The success of the enterprise and the very simple and effective style of cultivation make it another marvel in this land of natural wonders.

When E. J. Vawter retired from the active life of a banker he sought recreation in ranching. Part of the land in the confines of Santa Monica, the particular section of this city claiming title as Ocean Park, he experimented with, five years ago, for a more remunerative crop than that of barley. A tract of about two acres was planted with pure California seedling carnation plants. Since then the acreage has increased to twenty, and at the close of the planting work this season the ranch will have 200,000 plants in active growth. Ultimately the most of a 200-acre ranch will be devoted to the culture of this flower.

In brief, the carnation fields are yielding on an average from 6,000 to 10,000 flowers every day in the year, with a market in which the demand is at all times greater than the supply. The plants are perpetuating in a sense, are propagated in the open fields, cultivated with less labor than ordinary crops, and are exempt from insect pests and but rarely troubled with disease, excepting ordinary fungus attacks.

The average life of a field carnation varies from two to three years. New plants are taken in cutting from the old ones and put directly into the ground. They take root in about four weeks, and in about ten months are in bloom and continue to give their daily quota of blossoms until they die out. In planting the carnations are placed in rows three feet apart and the plants two feet from each other. This permits the cultivation with horses, and after once in healthy growth they require only watchfulness for disease and insect pests, irrigation about every two weeks and daily picking.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Last Sunday the thermometer registered 92 degrees in the shade. Since then it has cooled somewhat, but it is still much warmer than we care for at this time. Carnations are flowering with a rush and the best varieties are being sold wholesale at $2 and $2.50 per hundred. Portia, Scott and Joost are being sold for $1.50 per hundred and that will be the ruling price for a few weeks. Roses show the effect of the unusual spell of heat and weak stems are in the majority. Good Beauties are scarce and are bringing $2 per dozen. Short and medium-stemmed stock can be had at any price and the same rule holds good for Brides and Maids. Business has been only fair for the past week. Funeral orders have not been brisk but there has been considerable work for weddings and most of the retailers have had a share of it. Easter lilies are scarce. Violets are about out of season. Fruit blossoms are seen everywhere and California wild flowers are handled in large quantities by some of our retailers. Eastern visitors are especially fond of the eschscholtzias and they are at their best at this time. Many of the violet growers who at present have plenty of spare time scour the hills in this neighborhood and make very fair wages by gathering and bringing to market the most popular native flowers. Some of our dealers designate this kind of stock as "rubbish," but nevertheless more of it is being used each season.

Various Notes.

The accidental setting on fire by a careless workman of a quantity of crude oil caused a $6,000 fire at Domoto Bros.' establishment at Elmhurst last week. The flames destroyed a 3,000 gallon tank of oil, completely ruined an eighty horsepower boiler that had recently been installed and destroyed the house and stock in a 300-foot rose house. A large boiler room and several smaller buildings were entirely wiped out and several other large greenhouses badly damaged. G.

A CALIFORNIA OPPORTUNITY

Owing to death and the settlement of an estate one-half of the stock of the Leedham Bulb Co., Santa Cruz, Cal., is to be sold. It is preferred that this interest pass to a practical man who can devote his full time to the business. Cash to the amount of $2000 is required. The business is in good shape and can be largely developed. This is a splendid opportunity for the right man. The land controlled by the company is ideal soil for bulb growing. Plenty of water. Climate the best on the Pacific Coast. The property of the company has been examined by the editor of the Florists' Review and he has expressed the belief that there is a great future for the business.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

THE Louisville & Nashville railroad is planting sixty acres of catalpas near Jacksonville, Fla., for tie timber. The stock was brought from Dakota.

D. G. WIEGAND BRUSS, of the Boskoop, Holland, nursery firm of Vander Weijden & Co., is visiting the trade in the middle west, being at Chicago April 16.

MANY nurserymen complain that it is impossible to procure labor sufficient to get out all the orders they have on hand unless the planting season is of unusual length.

THE Chicago Tree Planting Society has discovered that Chicago has 1,100 miles of treeless streets and will start a campaign for tree planting. O. C. Simonds is president and E. A. Kanst vice-president.

IT IS a unanimous report that nurserymen are doing a rapidly increasing business in hardy herbaceous plants. Last year was far ahead of the one before and this year promises to eclipse all records in this department.

AT J. H. Hale's South Glastonbury, Conn., nursery and orchard it is stated that many peach trees on low land are killed by the winter. The damage at the Seymour place was much less and at the Georgia place prospects could hardly be better.

N. W. HALE, president of the American Association of Nurserymen, was nominated for congress in the Knoxville, Tenn., district, March 5. His election should be of material assistance to the trade in the matter of the national legislation it has sought for so many years.

THERE is a growing demand for evergreens for planting on the smaller private estates.

THERE is a good demand for Catalpa Bungei for formal work and many single specimens are planted for the oddity.

A TIMELY suggestion often results in profitable orders. Call your customer's attention to the ease with which the cow-barn or other unsightly object may be made a thing of beauty all summer by the planting of a few inexpensive, quick growing ampelopsis.

HIT BY HAIL.

A recent hail storm destroyed all the glass in our greenhouses and our crop of rose buds and carnation buds are slightly frozen. How may I manage the plants?
 F. W. R.

When buds have been badly frozen they are unlikely to develop properly, if at all, and should be removed from the plants as quickly as possible. The rose buds should be cut at the proper eye, just as if they were perfect, thus securing the best eyes for future crops. Carnations should also be picked with the same care as if they were perfect buds.

The cultural management should be guided by the extent of damage done to the plants. No forcing or feeding should be practiced until root action is again well established, which will be indicated by the breaking of eyes and the formation of new wood.

Above all give free ventilation, both by night and day, on every favorable occasion and keep the soil rather on the dry side. Use all precautions against mildew, as these checks are just the conditions that favor the germination and spreading of this pest.

I deeply sympathize with those of our brethren who were so unfortunate as to be situated in the path of the hail storms and floods, and as we happened to be among the number we fully realize the disappointment and loss.
 RIBES.

I HAVE certainly been well pleased with the REVIEW and would not like to be without it; I think every florist should take it.—C. L. SHANKS, Newton, Kan.

ED. FLORISTS' REVIEW.—There is an old saying, "Honor to whom honor is due," and we desire to give credit where it is due, and when. Our advertisement in your Special spring number has already (March 26) brought in several orders and we desire to express our appreciation of the "get-up" of the advertisement, which is most artistic and catchy.

The Market.

Weather this last week has certainly been against the development of flowers, as well as against the sale of them, having had nine inches of snow on April 15, and decidedly cold weather preceding and following it. This has had the effect of making both supply and demand very erratic. The development of outdoor stock has been retarded so that, where at this time of year we are usually cutting outdoor tulips, we now scarcely see a peep of them showing above ground yet. Indoor bulb stock has been scarce since Easter and the demand for roses and carnations has been keener on that account, which fortunately have been quite equal to it. At the time of writing, many of our retail men are making preparations for some big weddings and this will clean up considerable stock.

Various Notes.

The Georgetown Floral Company, who were frozen out after Christmas, are again cutting some very fair roses. Their carnation plants were completely ruined.

The hail storm which visited this locality two weeks ago did considerable damage to the greenhouses in this vicinity. Miller & Sons, at Bracondale, had their chimney struck by lightning, which accompanied the storm, this being the second time this winter. However, no serious damage was done.

We had a visit during the week from W. H. Kelleem, proprietor of Nova Scotia Nursery Company, Halifax, N. S. It was his first trip to these parts and he unfortunately arrived with the snowstorm.

D. J.

BELLEVILLE, ILL.

The Democrat, of this place, prints the following under date of April 15:

James Gurney, the general superintendent of Tower Grove park and Shaw's Garden, in St. Louis, and Philip Goble, the foreman of the propagation department of Tower Grove park and Shaw's Garden, were in this city on Wednesday, visiting Dr. A. S. Halstedt, of the St. Clair Floral Company. This was the first time that Mr. Gurney ever visited Belleville and he was very well pleased with the city and promised to renew his visits from time to time during the summer.

The two gentlemen came here on invitation of Dr. Halstedt to visit the greenhouses of the St. Clair Floral Co., and before leaving stated that they were well pleased with the trip. While here Mr. Gurney, who has been a botanical student from childhood up, and who since a boy has been connected with Shaw's Garden, one of the most famous botanical gardens in the country, commended Dr. Halstedt on the wonderful varieties of original seedling geraniums. The St. Clair Floral Co. has fifty-three varieties of geraniums, which were cross-fertilized in the company's greenhouses here. It is the intention of the company to exhibit three of the seedling geranium varieties at the World's Fair. When Mr. Gurney learned of this he advised Dr. Halstedt to give up the idea of exhibiting the plants, stating that the plants are worth thousands of dollars, and that the same should be carefully tended and watched. Dr. Halstedt is now considering whether to exhibit the plants, or leave the same in the greenhouses. Mr. Gurney was very loud in his praise of the St. Clair Floral Co. and predicted great success for the same.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—A farmer named Tygritt lost a turkey from a load while driving to town; it was found by an employe of C. J. Burdell, the florist. The farmer had the florist indicted by the grand jury for the theft of the bird, but the indictment was quashed when it was found he had nothing to do with the case.

ANDERSON, IND.—The four greenhouses of B. H. Klus & Sons were destroyed by fire April 14. The loss was about $2,000.

JOLIET, ILL.—The employes of the Chicago Carnation Co. gave a very successful entertainment and dance on the evening of April 9.

DAVENPORT, IA.—The Tri-City Florists' Association met April 14 and elected three new members. The next meeting will be held May 12 at Rock Island, Ill. John T. Temple is president.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Wm. Kalisch & Sons have the large contracts for the planting around the Chinese pavilion and India building at the World's Fair. Their store business is the best they ever had.

DES MOINES, IA.—The Morris Cut Flower Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. W. L. Morris is named as president and treasurer and M. M. Morris as vice-president and secretary.

CADILLAC, MICH.—W. A. Tweedie reports 16 degrees above zero April 18. Over a foot of snow fell April 15 and the ground is still covered. A year ago we had July temperature and the ground was dry and dusty.

WHEELING, W. VA.—The seven greenhouses of the Wheeling Greenhouse Co. have been sold to John Dieckmann, its manager, who took possession April 12. Mr. Dieckmann retains his interest in the store business, where Miss Clara P. Forbes is in charge.

PETOSKEY, MICH.—S. J. Long says Easter trade was all that could be desired, carnations, lilies and violets taking the lead. Saturday and Sunday were ideal days for delivering and kept us busy until Sunday noon. Everything cleaned up, even inferior stock went, except a few lilies which did not open readily. Sales were twenty per cent better than previous years.

FLORISTS' REVIEW,
CHICAGO, ILL.

Gentlemen:—Our advertisements in the Review have been very successful, so much so that we are sold out of cuttings and plants for the present. But we want to hold the yearly rate, so you may insert the enclosed cut flower advertisement in a one-inch space. Respectfully,

W. J. & M. S. VESEY.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Department of Plant Registration.

It having been shown that a rose is already in existence bearing the name of Enchantress, announcement is now made that the name Enchanter has been given to the variety registered as Enchantress by John Cook, of Baltimore. Dealers are urgently requested to make the necessary change in their trade announcements and catalogues that confusion may be avoided.

WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.—Easter trade was good with all the florists, everything selling out cleanly. Azaleas were in good demand and sold at from $1.50 to $6 each, roses at $2 to $3 per dozen, lilies 25 cents per flower and carnations 75 cents to $1 per dozen. A. J. Schmutz reports fine business and a good crop of lilies and carnations, with azaleas in fine shape. F. H. Pratt sold about everything there was in flower. His lilies could hardly have been better. The local dealers now have their houses full of spring stock coming on in nice shape. Geo. H. Phelps, of Blackinton, has been suffering for a long time with an abscess and underwent an operation at the City Hospital recently. He is now convalescing.

Indianapolis!

WE HAVE a fine lot of young plants in two inch pots, ready to plant right in the field. If you have not purchased any of this variety, you had better get some of these plants now.

INDIANAPOLIS is bound to become the standard pink for commercial use, as it has size, stem, color, perfect calyx, and wonderful freedom. Has outbloomed and outsold all other varieties in this market the past winter. There will be a great demand for this variety next season.

HARVEY B. SNOW.

Camden, N. Y., April 14, 1904.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The undersigned committee would urge every reader of this paper to write to the member of congress for his district, asking him to support H. R. 7874, proposed by Mr. Henry, of Connecticut, for the establishment of a parcels post and for the insurance of all mail matter against loss or damage, which law, if passed, will prove of vast benefit not only to our profession, but to individuals and business people in all lines. Impress upon your representatives the fact that we, as taxpayers and business people, are the bone and sinew of this great Republic, and as such demand our share of the benefits to be derived from the passage of this bill.

Insist that as our representatives they are in duty bound to deliver us from the greed of certain corporations which have fed upon us for so long a time and which have shown by their underbidding the postoffice department on registered second-class matter that outside of this class they are exacting from the public a profit of from 150 to 175 per cent per year on the actual express investment, and in many cases are collecting charges which are from 300 to over 20,000 per cent of corresponding freight rates.

Unless this bill is passed the present postal regulations virtually protect this carrying monopoly in its excessive exactions and it is due to us who have contributed so patiently and so long to have our wishes considered in the passage of this bill.

Prompt action is necessary; therefore write at once to your congressman and also influence your business friends in other lines to do the same and our concerted efforts may be crowned with success. Signed,

H. M. ALTICK,
ELMER D. SMITH,
Committee.

WAPPINGER'S FALLS, N. Y.

The Chronicle, of this place, says that so much has been heard with regard to Rhinebeck being the floricultural center of Dutchess county, that it believes something should be said for Wappinger's Falls. A half column is devoted to the several fine private establishments, notably those of W. P. Clyde, Henry Osterhout, gardener, and Irving Grinnell, John C. Galvin, gardener, after which the commercial places are described, as follows:

Joseph Jones, in spite of his illness most of the season, produced a fine display of roses, carnations, lilies and smilax.

A. Laub & Son, florists, of Hughsonville, report that their Easter business of this year exceeded any previous year. They have one house 16x100 feet, one 18x100 feet, two 16x100 feet, one 15x35 feet, and a carnation house 35x100 feet, one of the finest of its kind in the county, as well as a lily house, and a house for bedding stock. They shipped for their Easter trade 1,000 carnations and 23,000 violets, requiring eleven persons to do the bunching, as they shipped all the violets on Saturday.

James Duncan, formerly superintendent for J. F. S. Banks, now conducting the violet business for himself, made an exceptional showing for his first year. He has two houses, 20x150 feet, from which he picked 25,000 violets for the Easter trade, 9,000 of them being extra specials.

I. T. N. Harcourt rather exceeded his usual Easter display this year. Mr. Harcourt has on his place three houses, in which he grows carnations, cinerarias, pansies, ferns, palms, smilax and lilies, and especially good callas.

LANSDOWNE, PA.—Both William Rementer and Anthony Language report the Easter business heavier than ever before.

PADUCAH, KY.—Robert Rudolph has purchased the interest of his partner, Mr. Mattison, and is moving the six greenhouses to Rowlandtown, where he will continue the business.

TEMPERATURES.

I would be pleased to know what carnations to plant in the warmest part of the house. I shall have Lawson, Enchantress, Harlowarden, Potter Palmer, Flora Hill, White Cloud, Nelson and Mary Wood.
L. A. D.

I presume that all these varieties are to be planted in one house. You have a pretty wide range of temperatures in these varieties and unless your house varies a great deal between the two ends they will not all be suited together. I will give you the temperatures best suited to each variety and then you can plant them accordingly: Lawson, 56 degrees; Enchantress, 48 to 50; Harlowarden, 50 to 52; Mrs. Palmer, 52 to 54; Flora Hill, 54 to 56; White Cloud, 48 to 50; Mrs. E. A. Nelson, 50 to 52; Mary Wood, 52 to 54. This is, of course, providing your soil is of a medium texture. If it is very heavy Enchantress will stand two degrees warmer and so will White Cloud. In a light soil and a high temperature Enchantress is liable to have a weak neck and a poor color. It takes a heavy soil and a cool temperature to keep the stem stiff and to give it that beautiful Daybreak color.

A. F. J. BAUR.

CARNATIONS IN ENGLAND.

John Kneller, gardener at Penrhyn Castle, says that Mme. Franco is decidedly ahead of other winter-flowering carnations. It has a perfect habit, tree form, fine deep color and much fragrance. Its one fault is a propensity to split the calyx. Flowered in 7-inch pots many blooms are four inches in diameter. Mr. Kneller says Daybreak is another good variety, but smaller and lighter in color. "Mrs. T. W. Lawson with us is only moderately good and quite third class as compared with Franco."

NEWTON, KAN.—C. L. Shanks says business was very good at Easter, Harrisii lilies being in particularly good demand and his stock unusually good. He is thinking of putting in a wholesale florists' supply house in connection with his florists' business.

To-Bak-Ine. LIQUID

A Concentrated Solution of Pure Nicotine for SPRAYING OR VAPORIZING.

FREE FROM AMMONIA

I have given your TO-BAK-INE a thorough trial and find it a very satisfactory insecticide. So much so that I am using nothing else in my greenhouse since I found out its great merits. I consider it cheaper than any preparation of tobacco that I have any knowledge of because it does such thorough work that it is not necessary to use it very often.

The Market.

Things are brightening a great deal at present, both as to weather conditions and business. After a miserably cold spell we are having a few days of good spring weather, not so very warm, but still the sun is shining and it makes us feel as if life is worth living again. Business has taken a brace also and, while it is not working any of us overtime, yet there is a considerable increase in demand. The supply is not nearly so heavy as it was, either, and prices are consequently moving upward a trifle. There have been some good wedding decorations but nothing of unusual interest.

The supply of roses is not quite so heavy but the quality is much improved. Good quality Liberty and Meteor are scarce. Carnations are about equal to the demand and in very good shape. Prices are holding up first class, much better than on roses. Bulbous stock is moving steadily but at very low prices. There are a great many Harrisii and callas and they sell at about $1 per doz. Valley is in good demand and scarce. Violets sell at sight and whoever happens to have a good crop of them is hitting it rich. Green goods are still scarce.

Various Notes.

Hardesty & Co. had a narrow escape from fire last Tuesday. The blaze was next door and had it not been for the prompt work of the fire department they would have suffered considerable damage.

A number of the craft tendered a surprise on Walter Gray Sunday evening, it being the anniversary of his birth. There were all kinds of good things to eat, and a good time was had by all those who were fortunate enough to be present.

Fred L. Schulz, of Louisville, Ky., was in the city Sunday, visiting some of the greenhouse plants. H. C. Dieterich, of Maysville, Ky., was also a visitor.

ENTIRE TOWN SOLD.

Under the above caption a Youngstown, O., newspaper publishes the following account of the sale of Templin property at Calla, O.:

Richard and Wilbur Templin have sold their Calla Greenhouses, together with their good will, to Norman Bashinger, of Columbiana, and Charles W. Hendricks, of Leetonia, for a consideration not given, and the latter will incorporate and take actual charge of the famous seed farm after May 15.

The Calla Greenhouses were organized thirty years ago by Lewis Templin and have since passed into the hands of his sons and grandson. They were transferred to Richard L. Templin and Mark B. Templin. Wilbur W. Templin, a son of Richard, and his father have sold their two-thirds interest in the property, which is really the whole town. All of the land, together with twenty greenhouses and eight dwellings, were sold to Norman Bashinger, cashier of the First National Bank at Columbiana, and Charles W. Hendricks, teller of the First National Bank at Leetonia. These young business men are hustlers and the change augurs continued prosperity for the people of Calla and success for the members of the corporation that is to organize.

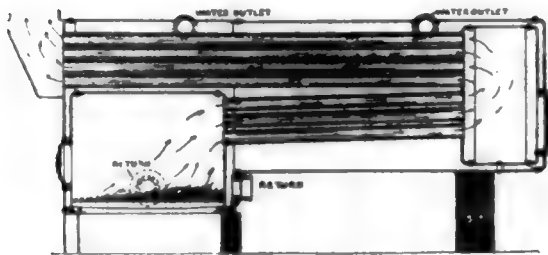

Through the enormous business of the Templin company, the postoffice there is second to Youngstown in this county and pays a salary of $1,700, a year to the postmaster, who is Wilbur Templin, placed there after a hot political struggle. The change may result in his resignation, and it is said that he and his father may embark in the same business in some other place. They have no plans at present, but their hosts of friends will wish them continued prosperity in any line and in any field.

Hale showed a vase of very fine amaryllis, scoring 100 points, and Wm. Turner showed some excellent melons, which also received 100 points. The judges of the evening were N. Butterbach, W. W. Kennedy and A. G. Williams.

"Absolutely safe and reliable. Ask your friends."

Distance No Bar.

We have had several letters from florists in different parts of the country stating that they would like to buy our

Tank and Tower

Outfits but consider that they are too far away from Louisville to be able to do so advantageously.

This is not the fact. There is no state in this country that has not at least several of our plants. They are so made as to be readily shipped and can be put together by any intelligent workman. For full particulars write ROCKFORD, ILL.—Will Reynolds will remove his greenhouse to a new location and erect a flat building on the site occupied at present.

BATAVIA, ILL.—Henry Wenberg and Charles Johnson, who succeeded the Williams & Sons Co. as proprietors of the Batavia greenhouses, are contemplating some extensive improvements in the plant this spring. The old greenhouses will be torn down and replaced by four large, modern structures.

THE MOST VALUABLE VIOLET TO GROW.....

WHILE DOUBLE VIOLETS have been "dumped" in the leading cities, good singles have been bringing good returns to the grower. The popularity of this Violet is astonishing. I have sold in the city of Boston this winter 1,300,000 blooms without having to make any sacrifice. You can do the same if you have good stock. You cannot afford to have poor stock. I have simply the best stock in the country. I will send out in May strong, transplanted stock for which I am now booking orders at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000. 500 at 1000 rate.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

CARE OF YOUNG STOCK.

Propagation should be continued right along as fast as good cuttings can be procured, as the main crop of stock should be all rooted this month. Cuttings so rooted are nice little stock for planting in June, which is a favorite month with the average florist. Many of the best exhibition growers plant in May, rightly claiming that the plants are benefited by a longer growing season, but these growers have their stock already rooted and potted up. The dividing line between the exhibition grower and the grower for the cut flower market is every year becoming more marked in the east, as the latter cannot afford to compete with the former any more on the exhibition boards.

More care is necessary from now on in rooting cuttings, because the sun is getting more powerful every day and if the propagating bench is in a position where the sun strikes it at all, shading of some kind is necessary. Much more water, too, is necessary and the cuttings should be frequently syringed to keep them from wilting, as the less a cutting wilts the quicker it will root.

While on the subject of wilting it may be well to add that it is a very wrong practice, though quite common, to take the cuttings off the old stools and leave them lying around for hours before putting them in the sand. Get off a batch of cuttings, prepare them, and put them in the sand at once. You will then have less cause to complain about your cuttings not rooting good.

When your cutting has emitted roots half an inch long it is time to get it out of the sand and potted up, because if left too long in the sand the plant gets spindly and drawn up and its constitution is greatly impaired. Begin right, with good cuttings, always do things when they need doing, and the chrysanthemum will be found one of the easiest subjects to handle.

For a first potting use nothing but a good, fibrous loam, unless it be a little leaf mold or very rotten manure. Bone or any other prepared fertilizer should never be used at this stage, because the plant is not in a condition to use food of that description. I have before now seen cuttings killed by kindness in this respect by young and enthusiastic beginners, who were going to show the other fellows how to do things.

Fire heat should not be used any more now and if you have by chance other things in your house that need heat yet awhile, the best thing to do is to get the chrysanthemums out into a cold frame. I would rather have my plants out in a cold frame at this time than any other place, providing one has a conscientious man to look after them. They need considerable attention in watering, ventilating and protecting nights from frost, but it is wonderful how they strengthen up and show by their improved appearance how they appreciate the change to what is for them more natural surroundings.

BRIAN BORU.

TROUBLE WITH CUTTINGS.

I am having difficulty in rooting my chrysanthemums. The stock plants were wintered under the bench in a cool house and seem to have been in fine shape when started up to make cuttings. They are planted on a bench in good soil, night temperature about 52 degrees. The growth is slow and when I take off the cuttings they are slow to root, and many do not root at all. Is it because the growth is too hard? We keep the sand wet and the temperature of the house 65 to 70 degrees. One of my neighbors tells me to take up the stock plants and plant them all but the tops under ground in rather poor soil, keep warm and water well. He says I will get more sprouts, soft growths which will root well. Is that right? Is there still time to try it? How late can cuttings be taken and get the cut flowers for November 1? I grow all my own flowers and can't afford to be late. Would I better buy plants than try to root them now?

A. H. D.

It is difficult to say just what the trouble is with the stock of A. H. D. He remarks that the stock plants were wintered under the bench in a cool house, a proceeding that, while often done, is wrong. I have often in these notes well as he suggests. I would not follow the advice of his neighbor and bury the plants. Such a proceeding would most probably mean that they would die outright. The weather is getting warm now and if A. H. D. has his old plants well established in the bench and keeps them well watered he will get all the cuttings he needs. Cuttings may be rooted up to the end of July and still flower by November 1, as the flowering period is more a question of bud selection than of early or late propagation, though if he wants good flowers with a two or three foot stem, plants rooted in May are late enough. If A. H. D. finds himself short of stock at planting time in June he had probably better lay in some young stock, but if the old stock gets to growing well they will produce a great many cuttings next month and he can afford to wait for the present.

GRADING MUMS.

Will you kindly tell us the standard method of grading chrysanthemums? Anything else pertaining to mum shows will be read with interest. G. N. Co.

If the G. N. Co. is asking for the standard method of grading chrysanthemums for market I would say that there is no fixed standard of grade, as there is with roses, for instance. The flowers are sold on their merits, the largest flowers, if all other considerations as regards foliage, stem, color, etc., are equal, bringing the highest prices. I have seen chrysanthemums bring from 1 cent up to 50 cents each, wholesale, the difference being entirely one of size and excellence.

Festival Hall and Cascades, Worlds Fair.

(The Fair opens on Saturday of this Week and Closes December 1.)

urged my readers to keep their plants up to the light even though something else had to be thrown out to make room for them. A. H. D. says that "while the plants seemed to be in fine shape when started up, the growth is slow." I have often noticed that stock plants when moved into new soil do not take hold kindly, in fact will sometimes die outright unless they are made very firm in the soil. A good pounding round the roots with a half brick will perhaps be time well spent.

There should be no difficulty in rooting cuttings in April if the sand is kept moist and the cuttings shaded. The growth is evidently too hard to root

The latter part of this letter referring to mum shows leads me to think that perhaps it is information concerning the judging or disposition of classes in an exhibition that is asked for. If this is the case and your correspondent will tell me just what he wants I will be happy to go into detail with him. I hope to have considerable to say in these notes later concerning exhibitions, as I think the subject is one of growing importance to chrysanthemums and chrysanthemum lovers. BRIAN BORU.

GERANIUM DISEASE.

I enclose a geranium leaf. Can you tell me what the trouble with it is and what to do for the plants. L. A. D.

We have seen this same trouble on some varieties of zonale geraniums, notably on the old single scarlet, General Grant. While the leaf was dotted over with a number of spots that remained green and apparently healthy, the body of the leaf was withered and yellow. I am not able to say what disease it is, except that I believe it is a fungus, although it does not show on the surface of the leaf as the common mildew does on our roses and other plants. I don't believe there is any antidote you could apply, or rather that it would pay to bother with, except the best of all cures, proper conditions. A cool temperature with little ventilation and a damp house with, perhaps, too much water at the roots is, I feel sure, the cause of this trouble. The zonale geranium is largely a succulent. If kept at a high temperature in winter they will grow fast and then would need a liberal supply of water, but if kept cool during the dark months, as they always should be when grown for flower gardening purposes, they want little water in the winter months. Pull off all leaves showing signs of the disease, give them the full sun, room to grow, a little fire heat and plenty of ventilation and they will grow out of this yellow jaundice disease.

Just a word about the geraniums in winter. I can well remember the method in vogue forty years ago in England. A dozen cuttings were put into a 6-inch pot, perhaps in November, where they remained till the following March, and in the mild winters of the south of England would go through the winter with perhaps not six days of any fire heat the whole winter and for a month at a time no water was given them. W. S.

cold frame for the almost hardy plants, such as the young carnations, feverfew, seedling hardy annuals and others; the mild hotbed, where so many things that are slow-growing but want heat do so well, and, thirdly, the greenhouse, with fire heat kept judiciously going.

Shading.

Shading is important just now, and often as important left off as put on. Common whitewash is often used, but white lead and naphtha makes a better looking shade, and will subdue the sun's rays without giving so dense a shade as lime. Don't use any linseed oil in the lead unless you want to get on the roof and scrub it off in the fall.

I heard a most illustrious carnation grower when in Detroit say that he had just shaded his Lawson carnations, that was about March 1. "What shade did you use, Eugene," was the query. "Cheesecloth tacked on inside the roof." We have used this material for shading the cutting bed for years, and it is excellent for the purpose, or anywhere where shading is necessary. Light filters through the thin cloth but it stops the direct rays of the sun. To keep the temperature down the cloth should be on the outside, but that, of course, is almost impracticable and this cheesecloth, either inside or out, for general use would be too expensive, so some easily applied liquid shading we have to depend on. Don't put it on with a syringe; you will get over the job quicker with a syringe, but it would not be as well done, and you will use much more material than with a brush.

It is not necessary early in the season, when some shade is needed, that the panes of glass be entirely covered. If it is to keep down the temperature in the bright suns of May, then a streak of the brush down the center of the glass will do, leaving two or three inches of clear glass next to the bar. The sun, or rather the earth, is ever moving, so that every few minutes all the plants in turn get the direct sunlight.

Broadly, I would say put off shading your fast-growing, soft-wooded bedding plants as long as possible. They will be all the better suited for outside if you do. Coleus, cannas and caladiums want no shade at any time, and a whole lot of other plants would not if you could keep their roots uniformly moist. It is in the bright, sunny days of May, if watering is neglected, that the plants in the small pots begin to suffer.

Plunging the Pots.

Did you notice, but of course you have, that you can plunge the pots of geraniums and even tuberous rooted begonias in the soil of a hotbed and let the fierce rays pour down on the clear glass and your plants will smile and grow strong, simply because the roots are moist, the hot, dry clay pot is not parching the roots? We used, in times gone by, to begin to plunge our zonale geraniums on the benches about May 1 in some easily handled material, decayed leaves, or, best of all, decayed refuse hops. Supposing these plants were in 4-inch pots and the plunging material was only two or three inches up the side of the pots, as in most cases it was. The difference in vigor, size and robustness of these plants compared with those just standing on the bare sand or ashes was simply marvelous, and so it is with all plants grown in pots. It is not the sun's rays on the foliage that burns and exhausts; it is the continual drying out and injury to

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Season of Rapid Growth.

We are about to enter the month and season when it calls for skill, watchfulness and energy to keep our rapid growing plants in good order, far more than it does in the cold months of winter, when to keep up the temperature is the main object. Growth is exceedingly rapid just now. If you don't realize it just keep out of a house for a week and notice the great change on your visit again.

One of the mistakes too often made by those growing many kinds of bedding plants is to let the fires go out in early May. I would rather have many tender plants in cold frames, where an abundance of fresh air could be given day and night, than in a house with no fire and little ventilation.

On this important subject I am going to trespass a moment on some good men's territory.

Fire Heat in Cut Flower Houses.

I never saw after May 1, or when there was no longer danger of the nights going below 45 degrees outside, any harm in letting the fires out in the carnation houses. From early April to the end of May their growth is wonderful. But when you cease firing give plenty of ventilation day and night.

Now about roses. There is no one who is growing roses in our climate who will not agree that it is impossible to dispense with fire heat before the middle of June. And is it wise or profitable to shut off the heat even at that late date? No, it is not. Last summer there were not seven consecutive days when you could do without fire and not have mildew.

Localities differ. I have seen a first-class rose grower of Darby Road leave the end door of the Bridesmaid house wide open in October while he showed visitors around the house. On being questioned, "Are you not afraid of mildew?" "Oh, no, that won't hurt," was the reply. It would hurt sorely with us, and mildew would appear. A little steam and ventilation will be the order of things every night this summer unless we should get a hot, dry spell, and then all things should be in readiness in case of a sudden change.

I am not going to say any more about carnations or roses, because experts tell you all about them, only the firing question opened up the subject.

Heat for Bedding Plants.

In the houses where a great variety of our summer bedding plants are grown the sudden stopping of fire heat is very disastrous to many plants. The show pelargoniums, as well as the single zonale varieties, will drop their petals the first cool, damp night and the florets of the semi-double zonales will rot. If you had a house with nothing but zonale geraniums in it, if there was not a speck of shading on the glass, if you were very particular that before night came there was not a drop of moisture in the house, and if you had ventilation on all night, then you might get along with these popular plants without fire, but a little heat is much safer through the month of May. Avoid that dampness that you see settled on the plants in the morning after a night without fire, for it is deadly.

Don't think for a moment that a little heat from the pipes and at the same time ventilation is by any means forcing. It is not. Pure, fresh, warm air is more conducive to hardiness than a close, stagnant atmosphere, even if it is cool. Coleus, acalyphas, achyranthes, cannas, caladiums, in fact all these tropical plants, will just stand still if you let out your fires before settled warm weather. The brightest coleus becomes as lustrous as brown paper. Besides these tropical plants there are any amount of others, such as fuchsias, abutilons, salvias, heliotropes, etc., which will be sadly stunted with such a check. There are three places or positions for our plants for the next three or four weeks: the the roots. I am not going to say that all your thousands of bedding plants should be plunged, but I will say that you can delay shading for a month, save hours of labor, watering and grow infinitely better plants in every respect if you plunge your plants.

Protect the Hydrangeas.

Last year we had a rather sad experience with a number of large hydrangeas that had been wintered in a shed where there was plenty of light and the temperature kept but a few degrees above the freezing point, an ideal place for sweet bays, hydrangeas, box trees, oleanders, etc. The hydrangeas during April will grow, and grow weak and spindling, and they should be got outdoors as soon as it is safe, but look out for the frosts that may come, and did come last year, about May 20, for this tender young growth will freeze, and that will settle the flower buds for that year. They should be outdoors, but in such position that they can be laid down and covered at any danger of frost. The sweet bays will stand any cold that we will get from November on, unless they have been coddled in a greenhouse, and have started to grow.

Crimson Ramblers.

I think it was in the Boston notes that I saw that the Crimson Ramblers that were summer-grown in pots and sold the past Easter were much superior to those lifted and potted in the fall. Of course they were, and always will be. Now is the time to start with them, either with plants you have in the field, or some you must buy from a nurseryman. Cut them down severely. If you leave two or three inches of last summer's growth it is plenty. You only want five or six canes of this summer's growth. Pot into 6, 7 or 8-inch, according to size and strength of plant. Pot firmly and put them into the coolest house you have, or in a cold frame. They will soon make roots, and at the same time start growth. If in a cold frame, I would prefer them moved into a light house as soon as root growth is active. When the young growths are an inch or two long, select five or six of the strongest, and rub off the rest. Let them come along slowly in the greenhouse, no forcing. Tie the canes to a stake as they grow, and when real hot weather comes be sure they don't suffer for water at the roots. A hot day and dry at the roots will produce mildew. And as I can see these pot-grown Ramblers on July 4 with canes five and six feet high, I will take a rest. WILLIAM SCOTT.

LILIUM CANDIDUM.

The merits of the ascension or annunciation lily, Lilium candidum, were at one time fully recognized by florists and large numbers were disposed of in our eastern markets. During the past six or eight years, however, they have been almost entirely dropped by trade growers. Not without some reason, 'tis true, for the major portion of the bulbs sold at low rates, produced miserable, diseased plants, yielding only three to five flowers per stem. At one time candidum lilies cut quite a feature in our Boston Easter market; this year we failed to find a spike in the wholesale flower market and only a few wretched little spikes in one of our Boylston street stores.

Our experience with Lilium candidum of late years has been that the cheap bulbs grown in Turkey, Holland, or the south of France are useless; they produce poor spikes and are full of disease. But bulbs from the north of France can be absolutely relied upon; for five years we have not seen a trace of disease on any of our indoor stock. We have had quite good success with bulbs grown in the sandy soil of Cape Cod, in Massachusetts and believe bulbs equal to the French ones could be grown in our eastern states if some enterprising grower could take them in hand.

The culture of this lily is very simple. We pot our bulbs as soon as received, three in an 8-inch pot. The extra large bulbs will need 10-inch pots. We get much better returns by using the larger size pots than can be had by potting bulbs singly in 6-inch pots. A compost of turfy loam, well decayed cow manure and sand is used. After potting the bulbs are stood on a bed of ashes in an open, sunny position outdoors until the advent of frost severe enough to freeze the compost quite hard, when they are placed in a frame. Bulbs for Easter blooming are housed about January 1. Lilium candidum does not take kindly to hard firing; in a temperature of 50 degrees at night it was in good season for Easter this year.

Plants in 8-inch pots carried four to six spikes with from six to twelve flowers per spike; good ones had fifteen each. This lily needs plenty of liquid food and is very susceptible to the attacks of green aphid, like others of its family. We consider well-grown specimens of this lily far superior to Lilium longiflorum, either for cut flowers or for conservatory decoration, and visitors are nearly unanimously of like opinion. Its cheapness, usefulness and ease of culture should commend it to florists generally.

NARCISSUS TRUMPET MAJOR.

Please inform me why Trumpet Major narcissus has failed to bloom after the first year's planting out of doors. Should the clumps be lifted, dried off and replanted?
L. M. G.

In Holland, where these bulbs are grown to supply all Europe, they are lifted every summer, after the tops are ripe and withered, the large bulbs selected for sale and the off-sets planted again in the fall. But that is no reason why you should lift them if you want a bed of them. I don't see why they should not thrive and come up and flower annually, as the Von Sions will, or the tulip beds which we have seen remain untouched for many years. You must look to some other cause for their not flowering. If they were planted in the open ground in the fall and flowered the following spring they should flower again the second spring, whether they were lifted during the summer or not. But if they were bulbs that you forced in the winter and then planted out last fall, that is another thing, and you should not expect much results for what with the forcing and cutting flowers and foliage close off to the ground, and a sudden cessation of growth just when it should be storing up strength and substance for another year's growth and flower, you are doing the very reverse of what nature demands. W. S.

insects and their eggs. Some good growers claim that the addition of sulphur in the proportion of about one-fourth of the bulk of the lime is a sure preventive of mildew. Whether this is so I cannot say, but it is an inexpensive experiment and free from danger to either roots or foliage.

To prevent the soil from running through the cracks, some straw or sod fiber should be placed on the bench. The soil should then be carefully spread, taking care not to let any inequalities, such as the hard bottom of the hills, remain. The benches should be filled flush, assuming that the sideboards are five inches high, and if bone is to be used as a fertilizer it should be added now. As this material can be added at any future time, it is better not to be too liberal in its use while the plants are small, twenty pounds to each 500 square feet of bench being within the lines of safety. This can either be left on the surface, or ruffled in previous to planting. RIBES.

SHORT STEMMED WOOTTON.

Our Wootton roses come full of short-stemmed buds and we seldom get a nice long stem, although the buds are perfect. The plants were set last spring and they commenced to throw an enormous lot of buds, and the more we disbud the more we produce. The plants are apparently healthy. What is the correct treatment to get better stems?
S. S. B.

This condition is very common to Wootton roses and often arises from the quality of wood used in propagating. Other conditions, such as poverty of soil, or lack of ventilation will produce the same results. As a remedy, when taking the cut, cut back to one or two eyes, give liquid manure once a week, keep the night temperature at 60 to 62 degrees, day temperature 75 to 80 degrees, according to intensity of sunshine, and give plenty of ventilation on all favorable occasions, both night and day. RIBES.

STEILACOOM, WASH.—We are having fine weather, after three months when the temperature was at the freezing point almost constantly, with no sun. Lettuce and cucumbers took a lay-off and stock had to be shipped in from California.

SEASONABLE WORK.

In order to have large thrifty bushes from which to begin cutting in September, planting should be proceeded with as early as possible, especially in extensive places, where so much has to be accomplished in such a short time. All planting of young stock should be completed before July.

Young stock must now, as the season advances, make its early summer growth, and if the growth takes place while the plants are in the pots we must not expect it to be so large or of such fine quality as that produced in the freer possibilities of the bench. Consequently, there is a decided loss in vigor, besides a curtailment of the growing season, which counts for a good deal in houses meant for the early work.

Growers who have studied the wants of their customers and the general trend of the market during the past season will now have their planting plans so far completed that they will be in no doubt as to the varieties and their different proportions of color wanted, and should let no considerations deter them from proceeding at once.

When the market remains good and the plants are producing heavy crops, it does seem like a sacrifice to throw them out, and this is frequently the cause of a glut in the market, reducing prices to the lowest ebb, where they are likely to remain during the rest of the season. With the early summer crops coming we ought to be able to keep our customers going from half the space required during the winter, thus protecting ourselves from an over-supply and its consequences.

To derive a little more profit from the old stock the judicious grower will make an endeavor to find a market for them. Beauties, Meteors, Golden Gate and Ivory make excellent stock for bedding out, and if these can be disposed of at prices to repay careful lifting, and delivering, it is like money found; they have to go anyhow.

After the bushes are disposed of the old soil should be removed and all accumulations of soil and rubbish from under the bench cleaned out. The benches should be thoroughly overhauled, and all necessary repairs made, making certain that they are strong enough to outlast the season. The woodwork of roofs, walls and benches should then get a thorough washing with the nozzle, using sufficient force to remove all accumulations of scum and dirt.

The benches should then get a coat of hot lime wash. This acts as a preservative of the wood, and is sure death to

TARIFF ON CUTTINGS.

In the case of the American Express Co., which protested at the duty assessed at the port of Buffalo on certain rooted rose cuttings imported for the Heller Bros., of the South Park Floral Co.; John Burton and others, the decision of the Board of General Appraisers is so important that it is given here in full:

These protests relate to importations of so-called rooted rose cuttings, which were assessed for duty at 2½ cents each under the following provision of paragraph 252 of the tariff act of 1897:

"Rose plants, budded, grafted, or grown on their own roots, 2½ cents each."

They are claimed to be dutiable at twenty-five per cent ad valorem under the last subdivision of the paragraph, which reads as follows: "Stocks, cuttings, and seedlings of all fruit and ornamental trees, deciduous and evergreen, shrubs and vines, manetti, multiflora, and brier rose, and all trees, shrubs, plants and vines, commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock, not specially provided for in this Act, twenty-five per centum ad valorem."

The official samples consist of small rose cuttings, with slight tendrils or rootlets sprouting from the base. The evidence is not in the most satisfactory form, but tends to show that the cuttings have been placed in sand a sufficient length of time to start root action in order to make them more hardy for transportation; that they have never been in soil or in pots; that they are advertised in trade papers as "rooted cuttings," the price ranging from $1.50 to $2.50 per hundred; that they are intended to be grown into plants after being placed in soil in pots; that rose plants are usually sold in soil in pots, and range in price as high as $20 per hundred.

The Board has hitherto held that rose cuttings were not dutiable as "rose plants" under said paragraph 252, being the youngest virgin stock from which hybrid rose plants "grown on their own roots," as distinguished from roses grafted, budded, or grown from seed, are cultivated. The record in this case supplies no good reason why a different rule should apply to the so-called rooted cuttings in controversy. On the contrary it is persuasive of the view that the term "plants" was not meant to include articles such as these, in which the root development is so small and to all appearances so immature as to be insignificant.

The last subdivision of paragraph 252 is not altogether free from ambiguity, owing to the uncertainty as to how far the expression "stocks, cuttings and seedlings of" qualifies the clauses which follow it in the paragraph. The cuttings involved, while they may have been grown by budding or grafting upon wild or hardy stock—such as manetti, multiflora, or brier roses—are themselves, it would appear, hybrids, intended to be reared into plants having such names as "Bride," "Bridesmaid," "Meteor," "Perle," "Sunset," etc. Since rooted rose cuttings can not be said to be either "trees," "shrubs," "plants," or "vines," if these goods are dutiable at all under the provision referred to, it would seem to be as "cuttings of plants commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock." This construction, it will be seen, extends the effect of the expression "stocks, cuttings and seedlings of" to all the subsequent members of the paragraph, and reads it as though as it were printed as follows:

Stocks, cuttings and seedlings (not specially provided for in the act) of all

(1) fruit and ornamental trees, deciduous and evergreen.

(2) shrubs and vines.

(3) manetti, multiflora and brier rose.

(4) trees, shrubs, plants and vines, commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock.

The Board is of opinion that this interpretation should be adopted. Although it may appear doubtful upon a strictly grammatical construction of the paragraph, it accords with what we believe to have been the purpose of Congress, viz., to include within the comprehensive language of paragraph 252, together with paragraph 251, practically everything in the nature of nursery or greenhouse stock. (Tariff Hearings, 1896-7, vol. 1, pp. 1038-50.) In construing statutes the intent is to be sought without controlling regard for mere grammatical rules. (Endlich on Interp. of Stat., secs. 81, 295, 414, et seq.) The protests are sustained and the collector's decision is reversed in each case.

VIOLETS.

Decline of the Specialist.

Anyone who will look fairly and understandingly at the situation will be compelled to admit that the day has passed when the grower can make the good money growing violets that he did a few years ago. In our estimation, there are several reasons that cause us to arrive at this conclusion. First is the overproduction that always occurs when someone sees somebody else having what looks like a good thing, and all plunge into it. This, then, leads to another thing, the lessening demand when the product becomes too plentiful and common, and this always to the result that the best paying customers, those who have the most money to spend for flowers, naturally turn away and look for something that is not so constantly before them.

Another reason is that violets never seem to be grown with equal success year after year, even when they receive the same careful, painstaking attention, due, I think, much to atmospheric conditions over which we have no control, and not thoroughly understood, often blocking our efforts for what otherwise gave promise of a fine crop.

Notwithstanding these and other reasons, violets hold a place, and always will, by reason of their color and fragrance, that nothing else will fill, and will continue to be grown; but I incline to the opinion that it will be more and more by the individual grower, in connection with his other stock, for his own trade, rather than by the specialist, mainly for two reasons:

For the specialist it is yearly becoming more and more risky, owing to decrease and uncertainty in prices. The general grower will take them up because he so often wants them on short notice and has not the time to send for them and, owing to the lessened call for them, finds it unprofitable to have a regular daily consignment of them, as at present prices those that he is compelled to lose more than counterbalance his profits. He will find that if he has a small house of his own for immediate use he can make them pay their general average in his profits on the whole establishment. It will be necessary for him to bestow the same constant care on his violet house as he does on his rose, carnation and other houses, being ever alert that they are in no wise neglected or uncared for, as they will be more certain to show it than the other houses do, if possible, although they all must have the care in order to have the best results.

A General Grower's Beginning.

If you have come to the determination to grow a house for yourself, it is time that you were planning for it, getting any repairing done that may be needed, all the old woodwork removed and old soil cleared out. Then treat the paths and borders to a good liberal coat of fresh lime, too heavy to be called a dusting, and syringe heavily enough to slack the same, letting it lie several days. If it is possible close the house tightly and fumigate heavily with sulphur, once at least, and twice would be better, with a few days intervening. Then give all the woodwork a good painting. All of this in order that the house may be in the best of shape for your violets when you get ready to plant the house.

What I have said refers to the grower who has to convert to violets a house that he has been using for other purposes. Of course, where you can do so I would by all means advise building a new house especially for them, one great reason being that they seem to delight in new quarters. However, I should not hesitate to try the other quarters if this were not possible.

Do I hear you say that you have no house suitable? Perhaps, still we have tried them in nearly all styles of houses and find that you can grow them with care in any of them, only you will have to adapt your cultural care to the exposure and style of house, and if I wanted to grow them I should not let this stand in my way, only be sure that you take a house that has plenty of ventilation, as this is very essential.

them similar to those described in your valuable paper as made by thrips. Our entire Lawson crop shows the work of thrips, if that is what it is. In order to check this we tried smoking six times a week for three weeks, except one night, and burning cayenne pepper in the house for half a dozen nights, besides, using three eighteen-pound packages in the 100-foot house. After this was all done our regular weekly smoking was continued till now. We could see no marked improvement in our blossoms. There are other varieties in the same house which seem to be hardly affected at all. We would like to know if there is any way of getting rid of this pest. The smoking was made very strong, using three pans. We spray the entire bed often, have good sun and good ventilation.

J. W. M.

The leaves you sent are badly affected with common carnation rust. Glacier seems to be quite a favorite with this disease, and so does Daybreak. The latter was always sure to have some rust on it as long as we have grown it. This disease is not feared so much, by the expert carnation grower, as it was ten years ago. Bordeaux mixture and kerosene emulsion will not help you much in fighting it, but dusting your plants with air slaked lime and syringing only enough to keep off red spider will check it materially. Pick off all the badly affected leaves before dusting the plants. Unless the plants are too weakened they will grow free from it in a little while after being planted in the open ground. If you could keep the plants dry overhead all winter you would have very little trouble with this disease, as it remains dormant as long as it is kept perfectly dry, which of course is impossible to do in a greenhouse in the winter. Excessive syringing will aggravate it, and especially if the plants are in a weakened condition.

The bud of Lawson showed those white and brown spots we too often see on this variety at this time of the year. While I believe that Mr. Thrips is responsible for these to a certain extent, I also think that the hot sun is responsible for at least half of the damage. During the winter there may be many thrips in your house, and they will cause white spots on your Lawsons and some of the red varieties, but the spots do not turn brown like they do at this season. The thrips bruise the petal and then the hot sun burns the bruised parts. J. W. M. does not say just when he did the smoking, but I presume it was while the present crop of buds was on the plants. If it was as recent as any time during this month it is too early to expect the blooms to be free from the spots. The half open bud may have been bruised several weeks ago, as the thrips are very tiny and they work themselves between the petals long before the buds begin to show color. I would smoke only a couple of times each week, and put a good shade on the glass over the Lawsons and see if that does not help matters a good deal. Do not make the shade too dense, but just enough to break the force of the sun. Give them plenty of water and ventilation.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Indoor Summer Culture.

I just want to say that if you are going to grow some of your carnations inside this summer, it will pay you to get them planted just as soon as you can. The end of April or the first half of May I consider the best time to plant them. It is not so hot then as it is in June or later and there is no doubt about the carnation liking a cool temperature to take hold and start growing. If you put up your soil last fall you will have good soil to plant in, but if you neglected it last fall, and had none left last summer, you will hardly be in shape to give your carnations a good show. Better plant them in the field and house them as early as you can.

A few years ago, when Jubilee first came out we planted our Jubilees on the benches in the spring. It worked so well that we jumped to the conclusion that indoor culture was the proper way of growing carnations, regardless of variety. We tried other varieties but found that in most cases our success was not so good as when the plants were out in the field a couple or three months. They get a sturdy growth on them in the field that we have never been able to get inside on most varieties. After that we confined the indoor culture to such varieties as Jubilee and Bradt and a few others that transplant poorly. Most of them have been discarded and now we plant only Mrs. Lawson on the beds in the spring.

I do not think that we will ever plant all our carnations inside from pots, but only such varieties as transplant poorly. That it pays to handle such varieties in that manner I am sure, but I feel equally certain that if there is any gain in indoor culture for most varieties, it is not enough to compensate you for throwing out all the old plants before June in order to replant. And if you want to give your plants the very best show, you should have them all planted by May 20. The advantages in indoor culture would have to be quite considerable to make us willing to sacrifice the blooms we cut during May and June and for which we find a ready sale. Just now our bed of Lawson is giving us a big cut of as fine blooms as any we could ask for and we would hate to throw them away for at least six weeks yet.

A. F. J. BAUR.

RUST AND THRIPS.

I send with this a Lawson carnation bud, also some leaves affected with something I will call rust. The leaves are from our Glacier plants. These plants have not done at all well this winter, the stems being short and weak and the foliage very bad. We have Lawsons next to them in the bed which are not affected at all. The cuttings taken from them are the same way, only getting worse. As a remedy we have put on two or three strong applications of Bordeaux mixture besides giving them a good spraying with kerosene emulsion just a day or two ago. We also notice that about fifty feet farther down in the house, which is 100 feet long, there are some Daybreak that are getting the same disease. Also on the side bench in same house our young stock of Glacier, Peru, Enchantress, Daybreak and others are coming to the same thing. Now I want you to tell me what can be done for these carnations in order to clear the house of this rust, for we think we have a pretty bad case.

And about the Lawson bud, you will notice that its petals have white spots on devour the buds or blooms it seems to me you ought to be able to poison them. Just what kind of bait would be most tempting you can find out by a little experiment. Try several to begin with and note the results, changing off to some other kinds every day or so, until you find one that is effective. If any of the readers of THE REVIEW have had experience in combating this pest we should very much like to hear of their experience and remedies. A. F. J. BAUR.

SUMMER CULTURE INDOORS.

[A paper by Peter Fisher, of Ellis, Mass., read before the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club, April 20, 1904.]

I have been asked to speak to you tonight on the carnation. It would be a waste of time to attempt a lengthy review in the progress made in the development and improvement of this popular flower during recent years, as it is no doubt fresh in your minds. As compared with five or six years ago the carnation of to-day looms up like a new creation, scarcely recognizable as a descendant from the family from which it has evolved. Strong and vigorous, of mammoth proportions, in beautiful and varied shades of color; and the end is not yet.

With this change in general characteristics has also come a change in modes of culture. Where a few years ago it was considered the proper time to house carnations from the field in September, we find them being planted in July. The latter part of August is now considered late. Experiments have also been made in exclusive indoor culture and this method is what I want to say a few words upon tonight.

The first requisite to successful indoor culture is properly constructed carnation houses. They must be large and airy, with ample ventilation on both sides of the ridge and in the side walls, the latter to be used judiciously. By that I mean opened on cool or cloudy days or during the night, but closed when a hot, dry wind is blowing and vegetation outdoors is wilting. If opened on such a day, or succession of days, red spider is sure to cause trouble.

A very convenient type of house, with which I have been experimenting, is of the following dimensions: Length 300 feet, width thirty-three feet, height to ridge fifteen feet, height of sides five feet, three feet being glass, with side ventilators and ample ventilation at the ridge. Last season we built a house of this size with detached roof ventilators. This season we have nearly completed one of similar size with continuous ventilation on both sides of the ridge, using 30-inch glass in same. My purpose is to test the merits of both systems. Another 300-foot house has continuous top ventilators, but without any on the sides. In this I have grown with excellent results some of our latest varieties. My intention is to plant directly from pots into the three different styles of houses and carefully note the results.

The advantages of indoor culture include perfect control of conditions necessary for the successful culture of the plants. They are not subject to the extremes of a dry or wet season, or often extremes of both, which invariably causes stem-rot. You save the time and labor of one planting. You don't check the plants as is the case when lifted from the field, which process has always seemed to me to be unnatural and gives some varieties a check from which it takes weeks to recover, and the larger the plants the more they are affected. Indoor-grown plants give a steadier supply of blooms, are not so liable to crop and are usually of better form and quality, invariably giving a longer stem.

Again, there are no doubt disadvantages to this method, especially with the average florist, who needs his flowers during the early summer months and who cannot afford to throw them out in order to plant into the benches before the young stock gets pot-bound. But if properly arranged there are few who cannot spare at least one house for trial. And where a grower has, say, from 20,000 to 40,000 feet of glass, or more, and besides carnations grows chrysanthemums or other quickly developing crops, a little forethought will always arrange sufficient space so as to be available when time for planting comes around.

The time for propagating the cuttings to be used for all-bench culture will depend upon the varieties and time when space is available. Slow-growing or late-blooming sorts ought to be propagated early in any case. But where they are of free and easy growth they may be rooted any time from January to April as required, first potting them into a 2 or 2½-inch pot, according to the strength of the cutting, and repotting until required for benches. But great care should be exercised never to let them get stunted or pot-bound; a 3½-inch pot ought to be about the limit in which to have them growing at planting time, as larger sizes take up too much valuable space.

Planting can be done with excellent results any time from February to July. I prefer May or June, the distance between the plants being governed by the variety and season when propagated. Strong growing sorts planted before May will require twelve to fifteen by nine inches, weaker sorts or later propagations correspondingly less, but in no case should free-growing sorts be planted closer than eight by twelve inches. This insures a better circulation of air around the plants during summer, and light during winter, which means better stems and quality of blooms, with few if any of second quality.

I prefer benches four feet wide to those of five feet or more, as the plants get a much better circulation of air. An extra path in the house is not waste space, for you always get more and better stems and blooms along the sides of the benches. Care should be exercised not to over-water the plants, as the carnation thrives best in a moderately moist soil and excess of moisture will cause the soil to become sour. Always damp down the paths and under the benches freely during hot or sunny days. Fumigate regularly every week for greenfly and syringe every ten days with salt water, two ounces to a common pail, for red spider.

No doubt some of the objections to this indoor culture will be the following: Attacks of red spider or greenfly; over-watering and souring the soil. And yet we have just those same conditions to contend with in the field, where it is often very difficult to subdue the insects and we have no power over the excess of moisture, usually accompanied by severe attacks of rust on varieties so inclined. Under glass we can keep those evils under control, the worst condition with which we have to contend being excessive heat. Yet I doubt if the plants suffer as much from this, providing proper ventilation and atmospheric moisture are maintained, as they do in the field when a dry, hot wind causes them to wilt.

Anything really worth having in this world costs something, and we usually pay the full price. This is well, as we are more apt to appreciate it when once obtained. To produce and put upon the market a new carnation often costs far more than the average grower thinks, in time, patience and hard cash, before being tested and its cultural requirements understood. How often have we heard of some originator, on the eve of reaping his hard-earned reward, losing almost his entire stock of some promising new variety in the field, as the result of an unfavorable season, either too wet or too dry. I have come to the conclusion that it does not pay to run this risk and to my mind indoor culture is the solution. It will be adopted gradually no doubt, but I venture to predict that five years from now few carnations will be grown in the field.

There never was a time when a better all around grade of carnation blooms was put on the market, never a time when we growers had less excuse for failing to produce them. With improved varieties to work upon and modern facilities at hand for their successful cultivation it clearly becomes a duty, not only to ourselves professionally but to the flower loving and consuming public, to place our product on the market in the best possible condition to insure their continued popularity and lasting qualities. Flowers have passed the stage of mere luxuries, they have become a daily necessity and among them the carnation is neither last nor least.

FLORISTS ADVISE AMATEURS.

The florists of Madison, Wis., and neighboring towns are active members of their local horticultural society and do much practical work in guiding the amateurs to safe paths. At the meeting April 22 Wm. Toole, of Baraboo, the extensive grower of pansies, said:

"If you want flowers all summer, you must put out the plants in the spring and also sow some seed at the same time. If the seed is sown now and until the middle of May plants will begin to bloom in August. They will do best in a medium clay and loam soil. The soil must be well fertilized and cultivated thoroughly all the time. It is not so necessary to water the plants every night as it is to keep the soil well stirred around the plant. The flowers as soon as they reach full size should be picked from the plant if a continual bloom is desired."

Frank Ovenden, foreman for Fred Rentschler, discussed bedding plants, as follows:

"The soil for nearly all kinds of bedding plants is similar. If one is making a new bed the chances are that the soil is not what it should be. If this is so, dig out about a foot deep and fill in as follows:

"Take well rotted sod or rich, black soil, not marsh soil, about a foot deep. Spread over it a liberal dressing of well rotted manure, about two inches thick. Dig well and thoroughly mix. Rake well and fine, leaving the center somewhat highest. Just a fine dressing of bone-meal given before raking will give color and quality to the flowers, but should be used sparingly.

"The geranium is the oldest, best known and most popular of all bedding plants. It is easy of cultivation and will stand more hard usage than any other, therefore it is often despised and put in 'any old place' and neglected, and then abused because it does not flower well. If given a good location with proper environments it will repay the gardener better than any other bedder. Though the geranium does fairly well in a partially shaded location it should, if possible, have the full benefit of the sun. Plant them about a foot apart and give plenty of water. Keep them well watered through the summer and all faded flowers pinched off and there will be a mass of bloom all summer and fall, till frost comes.

"The best kind of geraniums to plant are young stock which are propagated by cuttings from September to February. They are vigorous, healthy, stocky and will grow rapidly. They have the finest flowers and foliage and bloom more freely than old stock. Old, saved-over plants that have been stowed away in the cellar all winter or in some window exposed to the hot, dry atmosphere of the house never give satisfaction as bedding plants. They are too large and lean-looking, bearing small clusters of small flowers. They have but few leaves, which are usually small and far apart. If one cuts them back before planting it will be half the summer before one gets any good from them. The only place where an old 'saved-over' can be used is in an urn out in the cemetery. The best varieties for bedding are, among the doubles, S. A. Nutt, a bright crimson, and very thrifty grower and great bloomer; Brulant, a scarlet, a good, standard variety, but rapidly giving place to the Alphonse Ricard, a very bright vermilion scarlet; Beaute Poitevine, a salmon pink shaded very light at the outer edge of petals; Jean Viaud, a soft, pure pink; Frances Perkins and Montmort; La Favorite, the standard double white.

"There are but few single geraniums used for bedding. The best are Queen of the West and General Grant, scarlets. Nearly all the whites are good. There is one single geranium that stands high up in the list of bedders, E. G. Hill, a salmon pink. No bed of geraniums is complete without a border and I know of no plant better than the pretty little silver leaved geranium, Mme. Salleron.

"The next in importance is the coleus. Though they do well in a shady place, in order to bring out the beautiful colors they must have the full benefit of the sun and plenty of water. They are propagated by cuttings in March and April and grow very rapidly, especially as the weather grows warmer, for they are a hot weather plant.

"I put cannas and caladiums together as caladiums are seldom used except with cannas. A bed of cannas with two or three castor beans or an African banana in the center and surrounded with caladiums is indeed a very fine bed. It gives a tropical appearance and a cooling effect in hot weather. When one has a large lawn they are one of the finest beds to be had."

DAHLIA PROPAGATION. 7

In view of the recent discussion with regard to dahlia propagation, the following from the pen of Richard Dean, descriptive of "The Dahlia Industry" in Great Britain will be of interest. The extract is from an article in the Gardeners' Magazine for April 12, 1902:

"During February and March the work of dahlia propagation is in full swing. The large ground roots kept through the winter, and such pot roots as may be required of some varieties, are half buried in soil over pits in propagating houses, through which pass hot-water pipes. Growths are thrown up from a circle of eyes formed round the base of the previous year's main stem. As soon as they are three inches or so in length, they are taken off and placed round the sides of small pots in a prepared suitable compost, plunged in a heated dung or hot-water frame, where they make roots in from three to five weeks, according to the time of year; they are then potted singly in thumb pots, returned to a close frame till root action commences, gradually hardened off, and in April placed in a cold frame for the execution of orders.

"It is usual for the green plants unsold or retained to be stood close together on an ash bottom in a cold frame; they are abundantly watered overhead in dry weather, and in the autumn cut down, turned out of the pots, and dried; they are then known as 'pot roots,' and are very useful for sending long distances during the winter months, and for the execution of orders at that season of the year."

SOMETHING FOR THE STREET.

Will you or some of your readers kindly make some helpful suggestions. A customer wants a row of plants out near the curb on a prominent street. Cannas were tried last year but were not entirely satisfactory. Direct sun does not reach them till about 11 a. m. and between 3 and 4 p. m. they are in the shade of trees on the other side of the street. Something showy without being very elaborate or expensive is wanted. What will serve the purpose? Also, is the water hyacinth safe or satisfactory for an aquarium? We get many helpful hints from the REVIEW and always look through the classified list when in need of plants.

F. A. F.

From the limited amount of sunlight that this row of plants would get it is not easy to suggest any showy flowering plants. It is too shady for geraniums or salvias, and, as cannas were tried, it is supposed that something rather tall is wanted. Why not plant a row of some free-flowering herbaceous plant? Rudbeckia Golden Glow, the dwarf double sunflower, Tritoma Pfitzerii, or still better, the perennial phlox, either of these would make a fine show and last a long while in bloom.

Now, I can scarcely imagine a row of flowering plants "out near the curb" of the street; that would be outside the property line and would, I should imagine, have a ginger bread sort of appearance unless the whole street was so embellished. If this row of plants is put there to define the property line, as fences are, then I should decidedly say don't put either bedding or herbaceous plants there, because they would be out of place. Plant a row of the beautiful little shrub, Berberis Thunbergii, pretty, neat and attractive in flower, foliage and fruit. Left to its own free growth it is compact and graceful, or it can be kept to a smaller or more formal shape with shears. It is there all the year and far more pleasing, as well as suitable for the position, than any of our summer-flowering tender plants.

The water hyacinth is all right for an aquarium, but it is a most rampant grower, as the conditions of the rivers of Florida testify. As it spreads throw away the older plants or it will soon cover the entire surface of the water. It is safe in every other way. W. S.

HYDROCYANIC FUMIGATION.

Results of Various Experiments.

The most widely used insecticide for greenhouse fumigation is tobacco in its various forms. In many instances it is without doubt the cheapest and safest insecticide to use against plant lice and a few other greenhouse insects. Its effectiveness, however, under the best conditions is not great, as it requires repeated use at short intervals. Moreover, it may cause serious injury to the plants. In the case of violets it has been found to be of only slight value against plant lice working in the bud, and while it may destroy the so-called green aphid when exposed it is not effective in killing the brown aphid. On the other hand, tobacco may prove injurious to the foliage and flowers, bringing on epidemics of spot. Tobacco is also useless against scale insects in general and mealy bugs. The desirability of some insecticide as easy to use as tobacco but more penetrating and effective and less likely to injure plants was apparent and became absolutely necessary in our study of the diseases of certain crops, write A. F. Woods and P. H. Dorsett in their bulletin on the use of hydrocyanic acid gas.

Hydrocyanic acid gas since its introduction by the United States Division of Entomology in 1886 as a remedy against scale insects of the orange has proved of great value as an insecticide. Previous to our experiments early in 1895, though it had been occasionally tried in greenhouses, hydrocyanic acid was not recommended on account of its injurious effects upon plants. As a result of a series of careful experiments we found that, as a rule, plants were less injured by a short exposure to a relatively large amount of gas than they were by a long exposure to a relatively small amount. On the other hand, a strong dose for a short time was the most effective in killing insects. Different species and varieties of plants, however, were found to vary remarkably in their power of withstanding the poison. This in many cases appeared to depend upon the open or closed condition of the breathing pores, as well as upon peculiarities of the cell contents. Fumigation an hour or two after sundown, with the temperature as low as practicable, was found to give the best results. In all cases the foliage must be perfectly dry or it may be injured by the gas. In each case the proper amount of gas to use and the length of exposure must be determined by experiment. It is impossible at present to give a general rule applicable to all plants in all stages of development. When the conditions are once determined they must be strictly followed to insure the greatest success. The cyanide, as well as the gas made from it, is exceedingly poisonous, and both must be used with the greatest care.

The following are some of the crops on which the gas has been successfully used:

Ferns—For Davallia Mooreana infested with a scale insect .075 gram of ninety-eight per cent potassium cyanide should be used for each cubic foot of space to be fumigated, not deducting the space occupied by the plants. Length of exposure, twenty minutes. Adiantum cuneatum and A. Ballii have been tried on a small scale and were not injured by the treatment.

Coleus—Golden Bedder, Verschaffeltii and others; 24,000 plants in pots, badly infested with the white-tailed mealy bug. The house contained 15,587 cubic feet of space. Treated at the rate of one-tenth of a gram of ninety-eight per cent cyanide of potassium per cubic foot of space for twenty minutes, one hour after dark. Mealy bug all killed and plants not injured in the least. All other means of destroying mealy bug had been tried without effect. Large numbers of the common mealy bug were also killed by this treatment, but it was not nearly so effective as for the white-tailed mealy bug. All coleus cuttings made by the United States Propagating Gardens for the past two years have been fumigated before being prepared for the cutting bed.

Double Violets—Marie Louise, Lady Campbell and others. For plant lice and general fumigation fifteen-hundredths of a gram of ninety-eight per cent cyanide of potassium for each cubic foot of space is required. The exposure if made according to directions will not hurt the plants in any stage of growth. The gas has been used on a large scale in fumigating violets for the past three years with the greatest success, only a few treatments during the season being required. Length of exposure, twenty to thirty minutes. Leaf-eating larvæ, slugs, millipedes, cutworms, etc., when exposed are killed as well as plant lice. Red spiders, however, are not entirely eradicated by the treatment. The foliage of single violets, like California and Princess of Wales, are sometimes slightly injured by the stronger dose of gas. A weaker dose (one-tenth of a gram potassium cyanide per cubic foot) should be used when they are to be treated.

Roses—Perle des Jardins, Mermet and Bride. The young growth on roses is particularly sensitive and has been more or less injured in all our experiments.

Carnations—Scott, Garfield, Meteor and McGowan will stand one-tenth of a gram ninety-eight per cent cyanide per cubic foot of space for fifteen minutes without material injury. This will kill about ninety per cent of the plant lice, but will not kill thrips. The use of the gas for carnations needs to be more carefully investigated before it is recommended. The same is true of chrysanthemums, on which it has been tried with only partial success, the young growth being very sensitive.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Cut flower prices have hardened considerably during the past week, continued cold weather and an increase in social activity each assisting. American Beauties bring $25 for the best, but quite good stock is to be had for from $10 to $15. Brides and Bridesmaids are of good quality, $6 to $8 being the ruling price, extra fine stock selling at from $10 to $12 per hundred, and poor grades down as low as $8 per thousand. Liberty brings $20 to $25, and a variety of hybrids from $2 to $16. Carnations bring from $1 to $2, fancy stock being $3 to $4, and a few selling even higher. Quality continues first-class. Violets are still fairly plentiful at 40 to 50 cents per hundred for the best. Lilium candidum is more plentiful, and sells better than Lilium longiflorum. Sweet peas seem to be as numerous as in July, the best going for $1, ordinary grades selling for one-fourth that price. Antirrhinum, stocks, pansies, violets, lilacs and other flowers are plentiful. Gladioli are seen in one or two stores.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club, on April 20, was very successful, about fifty members being present. Five new members were elected. President J. A. Pettigrew was appointed chairman of a reception committee, which will include members from the various horticultural interests in Boston and vicinity, for the coming meetings of the C. S. A. and A. R. S. in Boston.

It was voted to award $50 in special prizes at each of these exhibitions.

Peter Fisher's paper on carnations, elsewhere reported, caused a very interesting and instructive discussion in which many of the members participated. For commercial growers it seemed to be the opinion that indoor culture will eventually supersede the present plan of lifting from the field, but the fact that it pays growers to run their plants the last of June may prevent its general adoption. In regard to fertilizers, Mr. Fisher uses sheep manure and bone. In using the latter he mixes one-half with his compost in the fall, the remainder in the spring; he did not measure quantity used. He considers horse manure equal to cow manure, especially if the latter is fresh. Mr. Patten has had excellent results from placing two inches of cow manure in the bottom of his benches and mixing none in his compost. He has grown equally good carnations in coal ashes, meadow mud and loam by mixing other needful ingredients.

Mr. Fisher considers there is no necessity to hose plants for red spider if plants are syringed once in ten days with salt and water, two tablespoons of salt to a pail of water. Rust will be entirely overcome by indoor culture. J. K. M. L. Farquhar said naphthalate of soda was recommended to him by an eminent French professor as a cure for rust. For fumigating Mr. Fisher uses tobacco dust. M. A. Patten considers watering of outdoor stock, if it can be thoroughly done, of great benefit, giving instances to prove it. Mr. Fisher does not believe sub-irrigation will be generally adopted; it is too expensive and too dangerous. Charles Sander spoke of the "critter" which causes trouble to outdoor blooming stock by stinging the shoot below the bud. Fumigation clears it away indoors.

James Wheeler spoke of his acquaintance with Peter Fisher on coming to America, and stated that Mr. Fisher wrote to him from America nineteen years ago, when he was coming over, to be sure to bring him a plant each of Croton Chelsoni, white cyclamen and Malmaison carnation. He was then with the late David Allan, and even in those days had a strong regard for the divine flower. The speaker denounced the comparisons of Fiancee and Enchantress recently given in a contemporary. Others spoke in a similar vein.

J. W. Duncan gave a list of varieties disseminated by Peter Fisher. Those of his own raising included Edith Foster, Freedom, Boston Market, Gov. Wolcott, Mrs. Lawson, Enchantress and Mrs. M. A. Patten. Other seedlings are being tried, some of which will create a sensation later.

John Farquhar spoke of visits he has paid to carnation establishments in Europe, including Turner's and others, in England; Benary's, in Germany, and Vilmorin's and others, in France. Kenneth Finlayson advocated the use of Malmaison blood to produce strength of stem, size of flower and fragrance. Mr. Fisher has never used any of this blood. He has always selected extra fine plants of varieties to be crossed, and uses the very finest flowers when the plants are at their zenith; to this he attributes much of his success.

The Chicago Carnation Co. showed a vase of The Cardinal, which created a favorable impression. Emil Johansson, gardener to J. E. Rothwell, showed a finely flowered plant of Odontoglossum Pescatorei carrying forty-five flowers on a spike grown in leaf mold, also a poorer specimen grown in fern fiber. This provoked a discussion of the merits of the two composts in which Messrs. Johansson, Craig, Pettigrew, Finlayson and others took part.

Various Notes.

Doyle made a fine display of the yellow Calla Elliottiana in one of his windows the past week.

Horse show week was the occasion of numerous receptions and dinner parties. Ladies attending the show carried more flowers than ever before. Violets seemed to be the favorite. Violets mixed with English primroses were also popular, as were white roses and gardenias.

An immense amount of damage was done during the past winter to trees and shrubs in this section by field mice and rabbits. At the Arnold Arboretum some thousands of shrubs are ruined, many of them very valuable ones. As snow lay on the ground continuously for fully three months, these animals were driven by hunger to eat the bark from trees and shrubs.

N. F. McCarthy & Co.'s auction sales of nursery stock continue to attract plenty of buyers. Roses, especially, are selling well, owing to the heavy mortality in outdoor stock the past winter.

The governor's proclamation this year recommends the destruction of injurious insect pests on Arbor day. This advice is excellent, as our gypsy, brown-tail, tussock and other moths, also beetles, canker worms and similar foes are very numerous. The trouble is that Arbor day comes too soon, April 30, for some of these pests to show themselves.

Weather conditions continue to be quite extraordinary for April. Temperatures as low as from 16 to 20 degrees have been recorded as late as the 23d, and showers have mostly been of snow. In our neighboring state of Vermont a foot of snow, fine sleighing and a temperature of zero were the conditions on the 20th. The run on the coal pile is continuous, and a change to warmer conditions will be very welcome to florists, to whom the past winter has been a very expensive one.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The market has been very erratic during the past week. The ups and downs of the mercury have been reflected in the receipts, and also in the demand for stock. The out-of-town buyers are heard from regularly, and the number of shipping orders going out is satisfactory, but the size of the boxes is out of proportion to the supplies on hand. In some quarters it is said that the rose cut is going down, but there is still more first-class stock than the trade can use, and the better grades are many times sold at a sacrifice. Cheaper roses clean up better, because the bulk of the requirements is for funeral work. Carnations have taken a relapse after the few days of stiffening prices last week. There are large quantities of Easter lilies and callas still about, but other bulb stuff is little seen. Violets are practically out of the market.

The receipts of smilax have increased slightly, and there is an abundance of asparagus, but it is in very good demand, as the scarcity of hardy ferns throws the call more or less to other greens. Some of the dealers still have a few cases of ferns in cold storage, but they are all rapidly drawing near the end of their supplies, and prices are going up in consequence, as no one wishes to run entirely out before the new crop is in sight.

Various Notes.

John T. Muir, manager of the estate of S. Muir, has completed the construction of a row of stores and apartments at Grand boulevard and Forty-seventh street. The retail flower store will shortly be removed to one of the stores in the new building and the structures and lease at the old stand, 3530 Michigan avenue, where the business has been located so many years, are offered for sale. The change was prompted by the fact that trade has been steadily moving south for several years and by the opportunity to make a favorable ninety-nine-year lease on this admirably located corner.

The bowlers held a meeting Tuesday evening to discuss the season's work preparatory to the S. A. F. contest at St. Louis. There was but one dissenting voice on the proposition that a try-out should be had, and the proposition of George Asmus, that a handicap tournament be rolled at the same time, to keep up the interest, was generally approved. The committee of the Chicago Florists' Club, which has bowling matters in charge, Phil Hauswirth, George Asmus and George Stollery, will prepare rules for a contest to begin at the Gereaux alleys on Tuesday evening, May 10, when everyone interested in the club's bowling is asked to be present.

P. J. Hauswirth goes to Quincy Saturday night to spend four or five days at a state meeting of Red Men.

The Fleischman Floral Co. is moving from State street to the new store which was leased some time ago in the Railway Exchange building, at 3 Jackson boulevard.

Among the spring flowers in the market this week were peonies from New Orleans, lilac, jonquils, narcissi and arbutus from the south. The E. F. Winterson Co. is getting in from 40,000 to 50,000 jonquils and narcissi a day.

After May 1 N. C. Moore, who has bought the Morton Grove greenhouses, formerly owned by Paul Kreisman, will occupy the sales counter in the Flower Market recently vacated by M. Winandy.

J. A. Budlong is putting in a new and much larger ice box.

Bassett & Washburn have 12,000 bulbs of Lilium longiflorum giganteum in cold storage for summer and early autumn forcing.

At the Florists' Club last Wednesday evening Prof. H. Hasselbring read an essay on coal. The Chicago Carnation Co. exhibited vases of Fiancee and The Cardinal carnations. Fiancee has been shown several times this season and at each appearance it makes a more favorable impression.

Albert Amling's addition this season will cover ground 128x265. He expects to plant it to asparagus eventually, but will put in other crops at first so that he does not get his cut all in at once. Poehlmann Bros. Co. will also build two large asparagus houses this year.

The John C. Moninger Co. reports that the greenhouse material business for this year is considerably ahead of last season.

A. Lange has been ill for a couple of weeks and Chas. Balluff is helping out at the Monroe street store.

Peter Reinberg is the Mayor's choice for delegate to the national democratic convention against Sheriff Barrett, who represents the other faction of the party. Thus far in the contest Mr. Reinberg is ahead.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Monday was the hottest April 25 in seven years. The long delayed, snow-bound and sidetracked spring is here. With a temperature of nearly 80 degrees the transition from the snow storm of a week ago is oppressive. From now on there will be night and day work for the seedsmen and nurserymen and the accomplishment of six weeks will have to be completed in less than half the usual time. Never was a winter more disliked and the kick he received as he departed was a universal one.

Extra fine sweet peas and tulips are abundant. Ford Bros. are handling immense quantities of them. The extensive carnation output of novelties from the Cottage Gardens still keeps the force at John Young's hustling and the orchid supply at this center is always abundant and superb. Brunner is king just now, even Beauties doffing their caps to the transient favorite. The supply is abundant. Langjahr handles a large quantity of them daily. The warm spell will see the farewell of the violet. Quality and quantity now are at low ebb. The end of the week will see their finish. Prices on all kinds of cut flowers are falling. The decline began on Monday. The week promises to still further depreciate values. Narcissi and tulips were in good demand last week and prices were excellent, as also were lily of the valley and smilax. The spring weddings continue abundant and the retail houses share the honors equally. Some of the most elaborate of the year occur this week.

Various Notes.

Charles Millang is utilizing his conservatories now for a choice selection of bedding plants of all kinds, a great convenience to the city retailers without facilities for the proper care of perishable stock.

Lager & Hurrell, the orchid specialists, of Summit, N. J., have arranged with James McManus, the wholesaler of West Thirtieth street, to handle their entire supply of cut orchids and are shipping a fine variety and quantity to him daily.

The American Institute of New York has decided to hold a great flower, fruit and vegetable exhibition at the Herald Square Hall, November 8 to 17 inclusive. Complete arrangements have already been consummated for the big show and a new departure may be noted in the continuance of the exhibition over Sunday, that day being made the popular day of the celebration. The committee in charge includes Dr. Hexamer, C. H. Allen, Dr. Taylor and Mr. Engleman.

Henry & Lee, the Bermuda, China and Japan importers, have moved into very handsome and commodious offices, one flight up at the old number, 97 Water street. Mr. Henry is still visiting his western patrons.

The Stumpp & Walter Co. is doing a big nursery business this season. The display at both its stores includes every variety of fruit tree, shrub and rose worthy of cultivation. They have some exceptional values in dahlias of all the best kinds for September and October flowering.

William Ghormley celebrated his "steenth" birthday on Friday last and we noted a handsome silver headed cane encrusted with violets.

The Morris County Gardeners' Bowling Club is growing quite cheery since Mr. Duckham's recovery and Mr. Herrington's return to this country and contemplates challenging that aggregation of veterans, the New York Club, to a series of contests. It will be a case of Russia and the Japs, so far as the ultimate result is concerned. It's a shame to have to do it, but unlike the Russians the New Yorkers are ready for the fray and the foe.

A week from Monday evening comes the exhibit of bedding plants at the rooms of the New York Florists' Club and the humorous lecture by William Elliott, the veteran auctioneer, and the wit of the organization. The combination of exhibit and discourse should crowd the rooms. The promise for a successful outing seems already assured. Out of over 200 tickets sent to the club members only two have been returned and these were from members whose absence in Europe on June 29 would prevent their attendance. Every member with the club's welfare at heart will be there. Remittances may be made to Charles Schenck, treasurer.

The new fern, Scottii, seems to grow rapidly in practical, popular favor. Mr. Scott has already many orders booked from the leading plantsmen of the country. If they can grow it as well as Mr. Scott there is no doubt of its general popularity.

The friends of Alex Wallace, the genial author of The Heather in Lore, Lyric and Lay, will be pleased to know of the recovery of Mrs. Wallace from the effects of a severe accident that necessitated a surgical operation.

The Hinode Florist Co. will soon remove its headquarters from Secaucus, N. J., to Woodside, L. I., and will also erect additional greenhouses at Whitestone, L. I., during the season. This company made a phenomenal record with its lilies this season and its fancy dwarf Japanese productions are a part of the decoration of all the leading retail establishments.

Bowling.

The attendance at Monday evening's game was inexcusably light, the warm weather and the evening both making the enthusiasm scarce. A change to a more generally desirable and convenient evening seems a necessity. Some of the faithful show marked improvement in the averages, however, as the following scores demonstrate:

Current Topics of Interest.

Business among the retailers has been quite satisfactory. The cut flower trade has kept up remarkably well considering the absence from our city of many of our best entertainers. Carnations, as usual at this time of year, are quite abundant and a few varieties of roses are also in excess of the demand. All spring flowers are rather scarce; especially so are shrubs, which generally fill up a vacancy at this time of year. The recent frosts have been very detrimental to lilacs and the crop for this spring will be almost a total failure. Consequently Mr. Valentine, of the Park Floral Co., is importing this popular flower from California and those already arrived have come through in pretty good condition, some of the varieties retaining their fragrance. Judicious cutting and careful packing would insure more satisfactory results from many of the California products in floral line.

The past season has been so satisfactory that several additions are now under way with the growers. Davis Bros. are adding to their carnation houses. Fred Hall is increasing his rose plant and the Park Floral Co. is building a range of carnation houses for summer use. These are of the simplest construction and will be covered with light muslin through the hot summer months. The carnations now in the houses will be transferred to them and will in every respect get a field cultivation. This system has been practiced heretofore on American Beauties, with very satisfactory results. The transparency of the muslin admits enough light and the partial shade creates a longer stem growth and a better color in blossom, two defects impossible to overcome in the open ground in this climate. The transferring of the carnations at this time of the year enables them to plant up the houses at an early date, which insures more satisfactory results in September than from those lifted from the field.

Old-fashioned flower gardens are coming into vogue here. Shrubs and perennials have been in good demand this spring and an annual increase in the call for this stock is looked for hereafter. Many of our natives do very well under cultivation.

The Park Floral Co. has propagated several thousand Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and is now shipping them east.

Albert E. Mauff, of Harmon, is a candidate for alderman of his ward and, although his constituency is in the minority, relies upon his popularity to gratify his aspirations.

The members of the Scott Floral Co. are contemplating a little recreation in the near future; Scott will visit St. Louis in May and Reynolds will go to California in June. Both have overworked since they started into business last December.

John Ferris, who has been growing carnations for the Colfax Avenue Floral Co. for the past ten years, is to become a fruit grower in the future, but thinks he will not be able to pick all the strawberries himself, so consequently is going to take into partnership one of the gentler sex. GREAT DIVIDE.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The conditions of the market have changed but little from those of the previous week. The weather had a great deal to do with trade. The early part of the past week we had a snow storm, which interfered greatly with the landscape work about town and at the World's Fair grounds. A few weddings in the west end and considerable funeral work among the down-town florists is about all that can be reported this week.

The opening of the great World's Fair on Saturday should make trade in cut flowers lively. Prominent men from all parts of the world will take part in the opening exercises, and quite a number of orders for this occasion have been reported. The great concourse of people that the opening will attract should be of much benefit to our trade, at least until the real hot weather sets in.

The consignments at the wholesale houses the past week were quite heavy, and prices a trifle easier on first-class stock. Carnations are greatly in excess of demand, with extra fine quality going at $3, good firsts $2 and $2.50, and common at $1.50 per hundred. The prices run considerably less in thousand lots. White and Lawson seem to have the best call. The rose stock is abundant at present, also of fine quality, with the prices somewhat unsettled; 6 cents buys some very fine stock. Fancy Beauties sell at from $3 to $4 per dozen. These are limited, the lesser grades being more plentiful, with a good demand. Sweet peas are coming in more plentifully with a good demand at 25 and 50 cents per hundred. Lilacs are expected from the south this week. The first of these, when they arrive in good condition, generally sell well. Bulb stock is overcrowding the market, and it is impossible to quote it at any regular figure. Paper Whites, Romans, tulips, Von Sions and jonquils are most plentiful, and a lot of these have to be dumped for want of room. Harrisii and calla lilies are also equal to all demands.

Plant dealers at Union Market report a fair business the past week. With warmer weather the bedding plant trade will be at its height by next week, and peddlers will again be seen in the residence districts, with planting going on in all parts of the city. Seedsmen, too, are having a busy time of it just now.

Various Notes.

Superintendent Perry, at the World's Fair grounds, reports that comparatively little of the landscape work remains to be done, and that the remaining work can be easily accomplished by the end of this week for the opening of the fair. There are now some four hundred landscape gardeners at work on the grounds, which number will be increased to 600 for this week.

Prof. and Mrs. William Trelease were at home Sunday, April 24, to meet the members of the St. Louis Cactus Society.

Charles Juengel reports that during the heavy snow storm of last week forty feet of one of his greenhouses fell under the weight of the snow, causing considerable damage to bedding stock.

Henry Ostertag reports a good trade in wedding decorations and funeral work the past week.

The Riessen Floral Co. is kept busy with hotel decorations. They have quite a number of orders for receptions for this week. Mrs. Buechel and a number of girls are always busy with some kind of work.

Phil Goebel, of Tower Grove park, has a fine lot of plants ready for planting out, which will begin early in May. This park is one of the brightest spots in our city. The head of the park, James Gurney, and his able assistant, Phil Goebel, will make this park the most attractive in the city for World's Fair visitors. This park does not come under the jurisdiction of the city park department.

George Heimgartner, who came here with Mr. Karlstrom, of Hartford, Conn., to complete the landscape work for their state building, was sent to the Emergency City hospital, and was declared insane by the superintendent and Dr. R. L. Moore. The latter was sent by your correspondent, who was notified of the young man's condition by Theodore Wirth, superintendent of parks at Hartford, Conn. The young man will be given every attention until some of his people arrive and take charge of him.

Bowling.

MT. HOLLY, N. J.—Conrad Beyer will build a greenhouse at his place on Green street.

EATON RAPIDS, MICH.—Mary La Fever has a good, growing business in the florists' line.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The week opened with an increased supply of flowers, many of them of rather poorer quality, due to the sudden change in the weather. The demand most satisfactory last week has fallen off and prices are receding. Sweet peas continue active; prices for fancy white and lavender are above market quotations on some days. Violets are still with us and sell well. Daffodils are exceptionally fine. W. K. Harris has a fine lot of Emperor. Daisies and pansies sold pretty well. Roses are plentiful; the best are in demand. Carnations are fair stock, not nearly as good as a week ago.

The Florists' Club.

A special meeting of the club was held last Monday evening to endorse Edwin Lonsdale for the position of gardener at Girard College, to succeed the late George Huster. Prompt as was the action of the club, it became known before the meeting that the powers that be had already come to an understanding with Mr. Lonsdale regarding his taking charge of the college greenhouses and grounds. The appointment is a splendid one and should make this oasis in the desert blossom even more abundantly than in the past.

An April Wedding.

A pretty idea carried out recently on Walnut street for a wedding breakfast was the canopying of adjoining yards with wild smilax. In this improvised dining-room carpeted with rugs, eighteen small tables were placed for the guests at the wedding breakfast. Each table was adorned with a different kind of spring flower. The bride's table had lilies of the valley. A table each was decorated with daffodils, daisies, mignonette, Narcissus poeticus, heliotrope, pink sweet peas, white sweet peas, purple sweet peas, freesia, and so on. A beautiful idea, but rather a tempting of providence, one would think, in this month of showers. The church old St. Peter's, with its high pews and galleries, was put in holiday attire with Easter lilies and pink carnations, a plan effectively carried out by Hugh Graham, in whose hands both house and church were placed.

Various Notes.

H. H. Battles had an elaborate wedding decoration on Saturday, both in church and house. White sweet peas, lilies and choice ferns were largely used. Pennock Brothers have been very busy with handsome wedding orders on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons had the decorations for the banquet given by the National Casket Company.

Joseph Renard's Sons, of Unionville, Pa., have purchased the place and greenhouses of E. J. Cloud, at Avondale, Chester Co., Pa.

August Doemling is sending in some fine Liberties to S. S. Pennock.

W. E. Fowler & Co., Silverside, Del., are sending in excellent Brides and Maids to C. F. Edgar & Co.

Joseph Johnson, of Hightstown, is sending probably the best violets coming to this city to the Flower Market.

The junior partner of the firm of Hoskins & Giles, in Reading, was in town this week.

Edward Reid had some fine shipping orders this week.

M. Rice has arrived safely in Europe. A calceolaria show, a novelty here, is being held in Horticultural Hall, Fairmount park, this week.

When a florist calls to know just what kind of stock you grow and you have an awful fright because your houses aren't "all right."

Keep him talking in the shed.
About boilers, fuel, pipes o'er head;
Anything in that line will do,
Till too dark to show him through.

STREATOR, ILL.—This has been a very good season for W. C. Hill and he will add two good-sized houses to his plant this season.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—At Highland Park a greenhouse 22x100 and a propagating house 12x100 will be built at once, with a potting shed 16x100.

FORT SCOTT, KAN.—W. C. Zimmer says that this has been an ideal spring. The demand for bedding plants is greater than the supply.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Messrs. A. C. Brown and A. C. Canfield have begun work on their new ranges and will have them ready for early planting.

EAST PALESTINE, O.—J. N. Spanabel has purchased a tract of land adjacent to his greenhouses, which he contemplates enlarging in the course of time.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—J. J. Curran, who for nearly six years has had charge of the greenhouses of G. Van Bochove & Bro., has resigned and will remove to Elmira, N. Y., to become superintendent of the new range of the United States Cut Flower Company.

UTICA, ILL.—Frank J. Baker has bought a tract of land on Sunset avenue and will erect six greenhouses 18x150 feet. There will be a shed along one end and the range will be heated by two seventy-five horse-power steam boilers. The plant will be devoted exclusively to roses.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.—A Ghent, Belgium, exporting company is suing Robert Chesney to recover $128.32, the value, duty added, of certain plants ordered by Mr. Chesney when the plaintiff's agent visited him April 10, 1902. Mr. Chesney contests on the ground that he refused to accept the plants because they were not what he ordered.

RHINELANDER, WIS.—Peter Phillip will double the extent of his glass this summer. The new house will be used for roses and carnations.

PLAINVILLE, MASS.—The second incendiary fire in this village within a week occurred April 14 at the greenhouses of Frank Sandland, the damage being $1,000.

WOODBIDGE, FLA.—Albert Buckwell has 3,000 feet of glass and cloth shade covering 6,000 feet. Palms are his principal output. Stock is good. Plumous strings sell well.

MOBILE, ALA.—F. P. Davis is building two new greenhouses 14x100 each. William S. Maull, of Holland, Pa., is now his foreman. Roses and carnations are in fair shape and selling well.

OWATONNA, MINN.—The Clinton Falls Nursery Co. has bought the Lord greenhouses and will remove them to its grounds on West Bridge street, where the business will be continued.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Hugh Seales, who does business as the Magic City Florist, has had so good a season that he is adding four houses, about 8,000 feet of glass, to his place this season.

FITZGERALD, GA.—Joel Thomas expects to build another greenhouse 20x100 this season for general stock. He reports a good season's business, the bedding plant trade being now at its height.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—Abraham Grofvert, who has been with G. Van Bochove & Bro., will start in business for himself this summer, building a new range of about 30,000 square feet of glass.

COLUMBUS, O.—Henrietta and Charles E. Stone have filed a claim for $1,540 damages to their greenhouses March 26 and April 1, caused by floods and a defective sewer for which they hope to hold the city.

DETROIT, MICH.—John Breitmeyer's Sons have decided to name their giant antirrhinum Breitmeyer's New Pink Snapdragon and will propagate it and send it out next spring. They find it a very ready seller as soon as they can get them in, and that as early as January.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Wm. Murphy, of 9 Dennett place, was arrested recently for whistling on the street on Sunday and the judge sentenced him to six months in the penitentiary, in spite of the fact that the young lady companions of Mr. Murphy testified that it was a boy a few feet in advance of their party who was whistling. Subsequently the judge released Murphy.

BUFFALO.

Current Comment.

While the people of the large eastern cities had the opportunity to sun themselves at a game of baseball, we were treated to nine inches of snow, and sleighing was resumed. Still, we were no worse treated than many other cities in our latitude, only if we don't get more summer than last year it can be truthfully said that our climate consists of eight months winter and four months d— bad weather. Seriously, it is the most backward season the writer can remember in thirty-six years. Last year we sowed sweet peas in the open ground in the month of March. On this day, April 25, not a furrow is turned, not a pansy blossom or even a dandelion to be seen, and the misguided warblers who left their sunny southern homes last month have been seeking shelter in barns and thick woods, and their voice is not heard. This is going to make a very short season for the nurserymen to handle their deciduous trees and shrubs.

There has been nothing very momentous in the floricultural line of late; business fairly good with an abundance of material to do it with. A look in at W. F. Kasting's commission house last week was convincing that flowers were plentiful, although those of good quality were moving off. What with moving into his large new quarters, attending democratic state conventions and advertising Adiantum Croweanum, W. F. has been a very busy man of late.

Prof. Cowell is home from Jamaica with a large assortment of West Indian plants. The Professor penetrated some of the tropical jungles that he thinks were not previously botanically explored. At any rate he has brought back several plants new to science. He escaped all snake and tarantula bites, and looks as tough as the commander of a Japanese cruiser.

Among the visitors in town of late was Mr. Gowdy, representing the Henry A. Dreer Co., and James W. Begbie, in the interest of Arthur T. Boddington. Mr. Begbie was accompanied by his wife. This is a good idea, having the "Missus" along, and in many cases would redound to the benefit of the home office.

A novelty in spring flowers this year are dahlias. The William Scott Co. has been cutting a number of fine blooms of late, but they were not quite in by Easter, because they were not planted in the bed before the third week in January, and Easter was very early. But planted about December 20, there would be no difficulty in getting them into full bearing by April 1. A vase of the beautiful single Twentieth Century is as fancy a dish as you would want to lay before a queen, and there are many other beautiful varieties.

"The Society for Beautifying Buffalo" had a bill introduced at Albany to empower the mayor to create a forestry commission. The three commissioners were to serve without pay but hire a superintendent, with necessary labor, etc., and they were to take charge of all the street trees, dictate what should be planted in certain streets, care for the welfare of the trees, remove unsightly ones, rent or buy land and raise young trees to sell to the property owners, etc. The mayor very properly vetoed it, and it's a dead bill. Uniformity of planting and the proper care and preservation of our street trees is much to be desired, but the municipality going into the nursery business is, in the writer's opinion, very absurd. I am an ardent advocate of municipal ownership of public utilities, which must essentially be monopolies, but begin at the ones that bleed us, the gas and electric lighting, telephone, etc. We can buy trees much cheaper than a city nursery could raise them, for there is no nursery trust as yet. W. S.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The weather since Easter has been raw, rainy and very disagreeable. There were three hot July days, a transition from January to midsummer. We thought it was spring for sure, but several cold nights nipped it in the bud. No outside planting has yet been attempted.

Business has been brisk, with a shortage of flowers until this week, when trade seemed to quiet down. Save for weddings and funeral work there is not much doing. Flowers are plentiful and for the first time this winter beginning to accumulate; long American Beauties, though, are a bit short in supply. The spring peddling wagons are in evidence, both on the streets and at the main corners down-town. Plant shipping has started and promises to be the heaviest in years. All energies are being bent to get stock in shape for the rush when it comes.

The Grand Rapids Violet Co. is again having trouble in getting water.

THE nurseries at Shenandoah, Ia., are approaching the end of the best season they have ever experienced. The planting season has been unusually prolonged and the result has been a general cleaning up in all lines.

THE telegraph sends out the story of how Howard Gould tried to buy stock last Sunday morning of the William H. Moon Co., but was refused, although he promised the proprietor "the biggest order he ever got." The Moon catalogue states that the grounds are closed on Sunday.

It is noteworthy that Hydrangea paniculata, although not introduced from Japan until 1874, is now one of the most widely distributed of plants in the United States. It is stated that some plants of the original importation are still to be found growing in the Botanical Garden at Washington.

MILWAUKEE.

Flowers for Councilmen.

At the installation of the newly elected aldermen April 19 a great many flowers were used. The desks of nearly all the aldermen, except a few socialists, received many designs, baskets, horseshoes and miscellaneous designs. In speaking of the flowers the leader of the socialists said:

I do not believe that the practice is conducive to the best government of a city. It is true that some of the aldermen need flowers to hide their reputations and diamonds to shine for them, but we believe that the practice should be discontinued. It makes the council chamber look too much like a graveyard.

In commenting editorially on this one of the local papers said in part:

It is not difficult to believe that to the gentleman, flowers would suggest nothing but graveyards, but if there is any place in this world where flowers are inappropriate, where they are not conducive of good government, good feeling, good fellowship, human kindness, and everything else that is good, that place ought to be closed by the police and kept permanently closed. There are people to whom flowers do not appeal. There are men and women who have little appreciation for the beautiful, either in nature or art; but heaven forefend that they should ever be placed in positions of command where they can make their tastes a rule of life for their fellowmen. The practice of presenting flowers to newly elected and installed servants of the public is a graceful custom that ought to be encouraged, not frowned upon. It may mean nothing more than a token of friendship and esteem, but friendship and esteem are something, even if the giver is not worthy to sit in the seats of the godly.

TOMATOES AND MELONS.

I have been reading W. S. Croydon's articles in the REVIEW on vegetable forcing, with much interest. I am growing tomatoes quite extensively this year, and at times have "windy," or hollow, fruit. One variety will be practically worthless; nice, large fruit, and no good, while beside them another kind will be good, the conditions apparently the same. Can it be that different varieties of tomatoes demand such different conditions? December 1 I commenced picking from a fine house; for forty days I picked the nicest and heaviest crop I ever had, then all at once they got very windy, almost worthless. Later on they were some better, but even now some are windy. My houses are very light, having iron posts and four to five feet of glass on the sides; they are of the Dietsch short-span pattern. It can be no fault of inferior houses and poor light. About February 25 I began picking from a big new house. For a month all the fruit was the very best in every way, but ten days ago one variety got windy, and now are very bad. It chances to be the most prolific and best shaped variety that goes wrong, and this section was run a trifle cooler, too. What variety do you prefer?

Do you grow any melons? I am at present experimenting with them. Have had a few very fine specimens, but had trouble to get good seed; it would not grow. Most I have are English varieties; can't get any French seed to germinate. Frogmore Scarlet is the best I have found thus far. Have one on the vines now that will weigh, I judge, over eight pounds. What price should such fruit bring now, and what is the best market? C. D. G.

The trouble you mention with your tomatoes, "windy" or hollow fruit, has never come under my notice, and I am unable to say what the cause may be, or what preventive or cure might be used. But from what you say I should think that the variety has a good deal to do with it. It might be a disease that causes the trouble, or it might be that the fruits were not sufficiently fertilized to develop the seed cells, of which the inside of the tomato is largely composed. In this case the seed would be immature, and by examining them you could find out whether this is the cause of the trouble or not. The fact of your getting good fruit from the picking in December and again in the warmer spring months, seems to point to insufficient fertilization, as it would appear that it is the fruits set through the dull winter months that are most affected by the trouble. In any case I would discard the variety affected and stick to those which you say do not develop the trouble. It seems a pity to have to discard a heavy cropper that produces large well-shaped fruit, for such a variety is hard to get, but when the fruit cannot be depended on, it is not worth while to keep on growing it.

Regarding varieties, I have grown the old Lorillard for years, but find that a good many of the fruits come rough and badly shaped at times. This I attribute to insufficient fertilization, as during the fall and spring little trouble is experienced from this source; it is the fruits set during the dull and short days of winter that are apt to come badly shaped. Of late years I have depended mainly on Sutton's Best of All, the fruits of this being very uniform. It is also a healthy grower, and a good, fair yielder. Stirling Castle is the most prolific variety I have tried, though the fruits are smaller than either of the other two, and in some cases does not take the market so well.

I find it a good plan to save my own seed, selecting the best fruits from the healthiest plants and saving them either in the fall or late in the spring, when conditions are more natural than in the dead of winter, and the seed more certain of being fully developed. If you try this plan you will know just what you have, and besides averting disappointment, you will also gradually improve your strain. I do not mean to cast any reflections on the seedsmen, but no matter how reliable they may be, and no matter how careful in buying their stock, it stands to reason that it would hardly pay the seed grower to make the careful selection one can do for himself, and the seeds, though true to name, are apt to be saved from all sorts and sizes of fruit. I am satisfied that there is a good deal more in this selection than the majority of growers think.

The same remarks regarding the saving of seed hold good with melons. I find that the English varieties are best for forcing. I have tried Frogmore Scarlet, but think Royal Sovereign is an improvement. I have never gone into melon forcing to any extent; in fact, I may say I am only in the experimental stage. I cannot find any dealers who have handled greenhouse melons during the winter and spring months, as they are seldom or ever to be found in the market, since there is no demand for them, but they are a delicacy that ought to take and command a good price if the trade was worked up. Such a fruit as you describe ought to be worth 25 cents per pound, and may even command more after a trade is created. A higher price would be necessary to make them a paying crop through the winter months.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THE market gardeners have lost practically one planting.

ONION sets are well cleaned up, orders more plentiful than stock.

VISITED CHICAGO.—Chas. Loechner, of Suzuki & Iida, New York and Yokohama.

REPORTS from the east are somewhat more encouraging than those from the middle west.

THE backward season is responsible for present offerings of stocks that were "sold out" some time ago.

THE city of Pittsburg has appropriated $5,000 for the purchase of bulbs for fall planting in the parks.

SHENANDOAH, IA.—There was a small fire at Henry Field's seed house last week, but little damage was done.

WITHIN the next two weeks sweet corn and cucumber seed will be looked for and those who have the stock should not worry till after that.

CHICAGO.—The official weather report shows that on April 20 the temperature did not go above 32 degrees, on April 23 it reached 79 and on April 24 it got back to 41 degrees.

BOSTON, April 25.—Seed dealers report that there is a serious congestion of business. One firm was over 1,000 mail orders behind April 23 and some days must elapse before they can catch up. Counter trade is very heavy.

COUNTER trade in general hangs along without any great spurt. The outlook is that by the end of the season it may foot up equal to previous years, but the expense in caring for it will go into the profits heavily.

WITH the jobbers reports in general show that the extra fine weather of last Saturday gave an impetus to fill in orders the early part of the week, but the cool weather which so quickly followed put things back to where they were again.

CHICAGO.—Little change in conditions is noted since last week, no improvement in trade and very little added to the number of acres planted. The rains in the early part of week shut off seeding for onion sets. Some parts of the high ground are seeded, the largest planting reported being some thirty acres on ridge land. Several days of real good weather will be needed before the average land will stand seeding.

TO MEASURE COAL IN BIN.

A solid cubic foot of anthracite coal weighs about ninety-three pounds. When broken for use it weighs about fifty-four pounds. Bituminous coal, when broken up for use, weighs about fifty pounds. The consequent rule for the approximate measurement of coal in a bin or box is to multiply the length in feet by the height in feet, and again by the breadth in feet, and this result by fifty-four for anthracite coal, or by fifty for bituminous coal. The result will equal the number of pounds; and to find the number of tons, divide by 2,000.

ISLIP, N. Y.—James P. Jeffrey died April 20, aged 80 years. The deceased was born in England, but came to America while an infant. He was for many years engaged in the florist business here.

YORK, PA.—August F. Plitt has removed from 533 S. George street to 739 Linden avenue. Charles Schaffer is cutting fine Brides and Maids. He is building an addition to his residence. Chas. Smith and Casper Henkel report a big run of funeral work since Easter. Edward Foust was married to Miss Rosa Lemon April 5.

DE SOTO, Mo.—G. M. Thost says: "The season in this part of the country is a long way behind last year. We have a few hundred carnations in the field, but the long rainy spell delays field operations. Last year at this time we had nearly finished planting carnations. Easter trade was all right, and we look forward hopefully, expecting good business right along."

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The busy Kearny street flower store of Frank Pelicano & Co. has a new house manager. Arthur Chapdelaine, who during the last seven years has successfully exemplified his merit as a front man on the staff of salesmen at this store, is the young gentleman who has received the managerial appointment.

A BEAUTY spot in California has been made of the twenty-acre garden section of the State Hospital grounds at Napa. Geo. A. Duhem, a graduate florist from San Francisco, likewise vegetable and landscape gardener, who is in charge as head gardener, is largely responsible. He is a son of a San Francisco pioneer florist, A. Duhem, now connected with Winstrom's Market street floral depot.

THE EUCALYPTUS

California seems to have the various climates that suit the different varieties of eucalyptus. This wonderful family of trees was introduced from Australia over forty years ago and their wonderful adaptability to this state soon made itself manifest. The common blue gum, E. globulus, is the best known and most widely planted of the species and many hundreds of acres are planted out annually for fuel. They are easily grown from seed and a six-year-old tree will measure fifty feet high and yield half a cord of wood. They grow very straight and symmetrical and when cut down immediately grow again from the root and in five years attain another fifty feet in height. In our warmer sections of the country this variety is planted largely on account of its malaria destroying qualities and from its leaves is prepared a liquid used in the removal of boiler incrustations. It has great virtue as a specific for rheumatism and the industry of extracting the essential oils is considerable.

The variety next best known is E. rostrata, the red gum of southern Australia. Although it does not grow quite so rapidly as the sort I have just described it reaches the height of 150 feet and the wood is very durable. It makes a very showy tree and is planted here considerably.

E. amygdalina, the well-known pepper gum, is said to attain the height of 500 feet in southern Australia. It makes a beautiful shade tree and is used somewhat for avenue planting.

E. robusta is the swamp mahogany gum of New South Wales. I have found that it flourishes well in situations that have a great deal of moisture, but is not of rapid growth. The flowers resemble those of E. globulus, but are larger and of a pure white color, contain a great deal of honey and are much sought by the bees.

I have several specimens of E. citriodora, the lemon scented variety. The foliage has the same odor as the lemon verbena and makes a very pretty shrub. The plant is not very hardy when small and has to be protected from the frost. It is a very interesting tree and bears a pure white bloom.

The finest garden variety, however, is E. ficifolia, the crimson-flowered gum. This beautiful shrub has very large, dark-green leaves and produces a profusion of large panicles of dark crimson flowers. It is very showy, both in and out of bloom, but is not a rapid grower as are most of the eucalyptus family. It is a native of West Australia, where it attains a considerable size, but with us it appears to adopt a dwarfish, shrubby habit.

E. Stewartiana, the apple scented gum, has the same habit of growth as the kind I have just mentioned but is much hardier. The leaves have the odor peculiar to rose geranium and like most of the family it is a profuse bearer of creamy white blooms. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We had a very heavy rain on Monday and Tuesday nights and since then the weather has been cool and clear. This has had a good effect on all classes of outdoor work. Flowers of all kinds are daily coming in more plentifully. Long-stemmed roses are in very good supply, with the prospects of an avalanche in a week or two. I saw some very fine Beauties to-day from Berkeley. Both F. Aebi and John Young, of that town, have had splendid success with this rose. Brides and Maids are good, but roses will get much cheaper very soon. P. C. Meyer, of Burlingame, is sending in some Liberty that bring top price. Carnations are in good supply, although some of our largest growers report off crop at present with some varieties. Lawson and Estelle and all the fancy sorts are selling at three dozen for a dollar, but they have to be good stock to bring this price. The other kinds, such as Hill, Scott, Schwerin and Joost can be had at $2 per hundred. Violets are daily getting scarcer. Bulbous stock, with the exception of outdoor freesias and Narcissus poeticus, has disappeared. L. longiflorum at $1 to $2 a dozen stems are plentiful and very fine. Valley is in abundance. Business is only fair.

Various Notes.

Dominick & Co., located for several years on the corner of Stevenson and Fourth streets, have opened a store at 3 Fourth street.

Golden Gate park is taking on its spring robes, and thousands of flowering plants are beginning to show their bright colors. A large force of gardeners are replanting the innumerable beds that have been resplendent with tulips, daffodils, hyacinths and other showy winter flowers, and planting instead phlox, stocks, scarlet salvias, petunias, verbenas, pansies, lobelias and hundreds of other showy annuals. In the conservatories a very fine collection of calceolarias and azaleas is at present on exhibition. G.

A CALIFORNIA OPPORTUNITY

Owing to death and the settlement of an estate one-half of the stock of the Leedham Bulb Co., Santa Cruz, Cal., is to be sold. It is preferred that this interest pass to a practical man who can devote his full time to the business. Cash to the amount of $2000 is required. The business is in good shape and can be largely developed. This is a splendid opportunity for the right man. The land controlled by the company is ideal soil for bulb growing. Plenty of water. Climate the best on the Pacific Coast. The property of the company has been examined by the editor of the Florists' Review and he has expressed the belief that there is a great future for the business.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business is improving steadily, but with no rapid strides. Already the demand for commencement flowers is being felt. These orders are from out-of-town points, mostly small towns where the schools close early. This, together with considerable funeral work, has kept the market well cleaned up and prices are very satisfactory. There is a good supply of stock but no surplus, in the better grades at least. In "seconds" and "thirds" there are at times a few too many, but they can usually be moved at some price.

Roses are coming quite heavily but they are selling first rate. Carnations are not quite so strong and are in good demand. Prices are holding up well, some of the extra fancy grades reaching 5 cents. Harrisii and longiflorum lilies also callas, are in good demand. Tulips are still with us, but their days are numbered. Roman and Dutch hyacinths, also valley and narcissi, are doing nicely. Violets sell at sight and many more could be used to advantage. "Green goods" are about the same. New ferns will soon be with us, which will help out the green situation greatly.

TORONTO.

Toronto has been visited by the worst fire it has ever known, wiping out what is known as the wholesale district, about fourteen acres. D. J. Sinclair was the only florist that was at all injured by the fire, although only slightly. Many who were spectators of the fire and saw the slight damage that was done, remarked that providence must have had special care over the flowers, as the building was burned on three sides, and on one side nothing but a glass partition was left between the fire and the flowers. S. Tidy & Son were saved only by the wind being against them; the building at the rear of their greenhouses was destroyed. It is hard to forecast what effect this will have on trade. A number of large weddings during the week used up a quantity of stock. Dunlop had an order in which they used a great quantity of southern smilax, Lawson and Prosperity carnations and American Beauties. This was one of the largest weddings Toronto has had for some time. Roses are plentiful and carnations quite equal to the demand. Bulb stock appears to be short. This week we have our horse show, which is expected to make quite a stir.

Among the visitors during the week who blew in along with the fire was S. D. Green, representing M. Rice & Co. He is a hot member and we gave him a warm reception. D. J.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

A slight improvement over last week's business is noted. Supplies of all flowers except Easter lilies have shortened up and prices have advanced slightly. A general cleaning up on all stock, except lilies, occurs daily. The supply is, however, equal to the demand; the only shortage noticeable is on white carnations and white roses. Among the novelties arriving now are giant snapdragon, in white and colors, also some extraordinary fine Iris Hispanica, which bring good prices. The demand for sweet peas, single daffodils and yellow daisies is good.

Various Notes.

The Kuhn wedding last Tuesday called for considerable fine stock. Charles T. Siebert had the decoration; Mr. Zieger said it was one of the most beautiful decorations he ever superintended. Yellow irises, yellow giant daisies, American Beauty, Bride and Bridesmaid roses were used in large quantities.

L. I. Neff's Sixth street store window decoration last week attracted considerable attention; the baby sweet alysum in miniature pots proved to be a very paying novelty.

E. C. Ludwig is receiving some very fine trailing arbutus and candytuft.

Max Schreiber is sending the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. candidum lilies.

Visitor: Gust A. Geng, Youngstown, Ohio. Hoo-Hoo.

WE are in receipt of a box of fine lead pencils, each stamped with the name of S. S. Pennock, wholesale florist, Philadelphia.

CLEVELAND, O.—A bulldog owned by John Travers critically injured a three-year-old boy on April 23. The physicians have the dog confined to see if hydrophobia develops.

MEADVILLE, PA.—Geo. W. Haas says that Easter trade was very good and that they might have done much better if they had had stock to meet the demand for potted plants. He looks for a good spring trade, as much stock was killed during the past severe winter.
